Culture & fun mark a Cohasset tour

By Jane Lane

If you're into honky tonk, skim over Cohasset this summer.

Lots of events are occurring throughout the summer here; events of social and recreational import.

Cohasset is a haven for those refined individuals seeking leisure activites with a taste of culture (and fun).

The population of this small coastal community does not visibly swell during the next couple of months, but its activities increase as welcomed tourists visit this attractive New England town.

Cohasset is a town that thrives on recreation and education. A combination of the two creates the typical summer event.

During a heatwave, people flock to picturesque Cohasset Harbor and its many fine restaurants. But there are a variety of reasons why people are attracted and return to this quiet hamlet by the sea.

Its sense of history and preservation of the past are immediately recognized in a visit to Cohasset. Located by the ocean, passable only from Route 3A and 28, this secluded sanctuary offers much to its neighbors. Beautiful Colonial homesteads, tree-lined narrow-streets, and the frequently-photographed Common are blended with contemporary structures reverently created with respect for ocean views.

A variety of people inhabit this town, and it's that unique variation that typifies its seasonal activities.

One of the summer's first events is the annual Cohasset Riding Club Show. Held on the green of Wheelwright Park, this will be the club's eighth annual show.

It will be held Saturday, June 30, and spectators are invited and encouraged. Admission is free. Riders from throughout town and from the Hingham 4-H Club will participate in this crowd-pleasing spectacle.

Commencing at 9 a.m., will be the Fitting and Showmanship portion of the program. This is a very important segment in which the 4-H -sponsored horses will be judged on condition, appearance, how well they stand and are led by their trainers.

There are several separate divisions taking place throughout the day. Riders will be judged in the Adult Division; horsemanship will be reviewed in the Equitation Division; the quality of the horse will be determined for both children and adult riders in the Pleasure and Hunter Divisions; there will be a Pony Division, as well as a Limit Equitation and Maiden Hunter division for horses and riders who have yet to obtain a blue ribbon.

Flat classes will be demonstrated in the morning, and trail classes in which horses have to manuever past obstacles, will finish the day's events.

This has been a popular start to Cohasset's summer for several years.

For those on the South Shore who have never figured why there is so much traffic along Route 3A during weekday summer evenings, here's the answer. The South Shore Music Circus.

For the past 34 years, this outdoor musical theatre has produced some of the finest entertainment. World-renowned singers, actors and entertainers have flocked to this theatre-in-the-round held each summer under the glorious yellow and white tents of Sohier Street.

There is always something for everyone's taste at the Music Circus. Opening day was scheduled for June 23 with the Pointer Sisters, a musical pop group. The very next day, the Big Band sound of Artie Shaw will make an appearance under the Big Top.

Wacky Joan Rivers introduces the month of July at the Music Circus with two appearances June 30 and July 1. Performances are scheduled for 7 and 10 p.m. both days, but as of this writing, seats were only available for the 10 p.m. show July 1.

There's a schedule of variety throughout the summer at this local hotspot, and tickets are always in demand and quickly sold. Tickets to all events may be purchased through Teletron (720-3434) and Chargit (1-800-223-0120). Tickets are available at all Ticketron outlets.

Another summer tradition for many years in Cohasset is its South Shore Art Center. This relatively small building located at 103 Ripley Road sponsors hundreds of activities and events throughout the year. Summer doesn't offer a hiatus to art-loving patrons in this area. The South Shore Art Center never slows down; in fact, its programs seem to increase during the warm weather.

Summertime at the art center translates into two four-week sessions of courses for all levels of artistic ability. The first term runs from July 9 through August 3 and the next term begin August 6 and concludes August 31.

Kicking off the first summer session will be Virginia Moore's Basic Drawing for beginning and intermediate level artists, starting July 9 and held Monday and Wednesday evenings from 7:30 to 10.

The Tuesday-Thursday schedule commences July 10 with Harriet Zabusky-Zand's Portrait Basics, from 7:30 to 10 p.m.; Joe Ciccolo's Art for Reproduction, 7:30 to 10 p.m.; Susan Rodgerson's Painting and Drawing Landscape for ages 12 to 16 from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m.; and Serena Brundige's Exploring with Paint and Pencil for ages seven to 11 from 2 to 2:30 p.m. (Brundige's course will be repeated with a second session beginning August 7). David Tandy's course, Introductory Drawing and Introductory Painting will be offered as a second session Tuesday and Thursday, starting August 7 from 7:30 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Two sessions of Virginia Avery's Outdoor Watercolor for all levels of artistic ability are offered on the summer schedule. One course begins July 11 and the other, August 8, and both will meet Wednesdays and Fridays, 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

There is also an extremely active photography department at the South Shore Art Center. Paul Fortin will offer Beginning and Intermediate/Advanced Photography courses throughout the summer. Beginning Photography will meet Mondays, starting July 9 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The intermediate class will meet Wednesdays, beginning July 11 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

And there will be a special Child's Clay and Sculpture workshop beginning July 16 and running for five classes, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 1 to 2:30 p.m. This class is for children ages six to 12.

Summer classes conclude August 31 - a full schedule of events tied into a few weeks.

For more information on workshops and courses, the center would be happy to discuss specifics, if you call them at 383-9548.

This is but a spattering of summer events taking place in this beautiful town. Why not sample some?

July Color Workshop

The Scituate Arts Association Gallery welcomes summer with a splash of color. The color is most ably applied by watercolorist Jo Ward, who opens her one-man show at the Arts Association harbor gallery on Sunday, July 1.

Advocate of direct painting, Jo paints the familiar, everyday things. Fruits and vegetables are her inspiration, clear, crisp and inviting.

The artist, a 30-year Hingham resident, has been exhibited in juried shows throughout the South Shore. Her works have appeared at Jordan Marsh, The Copley Society of Boston, City Hall - Boston, the Federal Reserve - Boston, and the New England Conservatory in Hingham.

Included in may private collections, she is also shown at the South Shore Art Association Gallery of Cohasset, the Scituate Art Association Gallery and the Schnabel Gallery in Hingham.

Ward studied with Priscilla Sibley, Eugene Cronin, Claude Croney, and Charles Mahoney. She is a member of the South Shore Art Association and its Gallery, the Scituate Art Association and its Gallery and the Copley Society of Boston.

Area sports lineup includes a potpourri of events

By Mike Berger

Bored at night?

If you're a traditional sports fan (baseball, softball, basketball, soccer and tennis) or an alternative sports fan (sailing, canoeing, windsurfing, horsehoes, swimming and running) you're in luck.

Almost any night, the sounds of bats, balls, "ringer" and the masts of sailing ships fill the steamy, summer air.

The Mariner coastline area of Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, Hanover and Pembroke has a plethora of area sports which draws residents from not only within the individual community but from a wide geographic area.

The tradtional summer lineup includes the traditional "rock-um, sock-um" hard nosed softball leagues for men, women and girls, summer basketball, both organized and pick-up games, regional youth all-star soccer, semi-pro and American Legion baseball leagues, swimming meets and tennis and golf matches at several private clubs.

But this area also offers other individual sports such as three road races, youth track meets, windsurfing and scuba diving, horseshoes and golf.

Softball

"The sport" this or any summer is softball as Marshfield, Hingham, Cohasset-Scituate, Hanover and Pembroke have organized mens' softball leagues.

And these games aren't for pansies either. It's winner take all, playing for all the marbles, hard sliding, hard running and hard throwing.

Predominately, it's a Monday through Friday night schedule with games scheduled at the major athletic fields in each time beginning at 6 p.m. Some fields have lights which means a second game begins around 7:30 to 8 p.m.

There are also womens' softball leagues in Pembroke and the North River League which covers many towns around the Marshfield area.

And for the Sunday crowd, it's the area Civic Softball League known for many as a police officer's league. Many Hingham, Weymouth and Scituate police are known to pull a long ball on Sunday.

These teams like many of the mens' and womens' competitive softball league carry the companies' sponsoring name. Such a variety includes Building 19, Hingham Police, Strawberry Parfait, Clipper Ship, Strawberry Parfait, Weymouth Police, Marshfield Sunoco, Anderson Insulation, Hugo's, Mug and Muffin, L Street Pub and the Over the Hill Gang.

Baseball

For hard-nosed baseball, there are two area semi-pro baseball teams in the Cranberry League, another competitive baseball league in the South Shore Coast League and still an American Legion baseball team in Norwell.

Quoting from Mariner sportswriter Rich Finnegan, "The Cranberry League is a league of eight teams from the South Shore area that's designed to keep college players sharp in the summer and increase their chances of making it to the pros.

"The league has obviously drawn some good talent as three of its members were recently picked in the major league draft. Norwell is represented in the league by the "Mariners" (no relation to the newspaper) and is sponsored primarily by Village Classics of Norwell Center.

"The team is coached by Joe Connolly who was an outstanding high school and college players who plays as well as coaches."

The league tries to draw on the best college baseball talent in New England and the Mariners have players from schools such as Boston College, Bridgewater State, Framingham and University of Connecticut.

Teams play 35 and 40 games and the top five teams qualify for the playoffs.

Another writer, David Pandolfe interviewed former Red Sox "Impossible Dream" team pitcher Darrell "Bucky" Brandon," the coach of the Hanover Braves the Hanover Braves.

In the South Shore Coast League, the Scituate Seadogs will play Quincy, Canton, Weymouth, Rockland, Randolph, Braintree, Hingham, and Quincy.

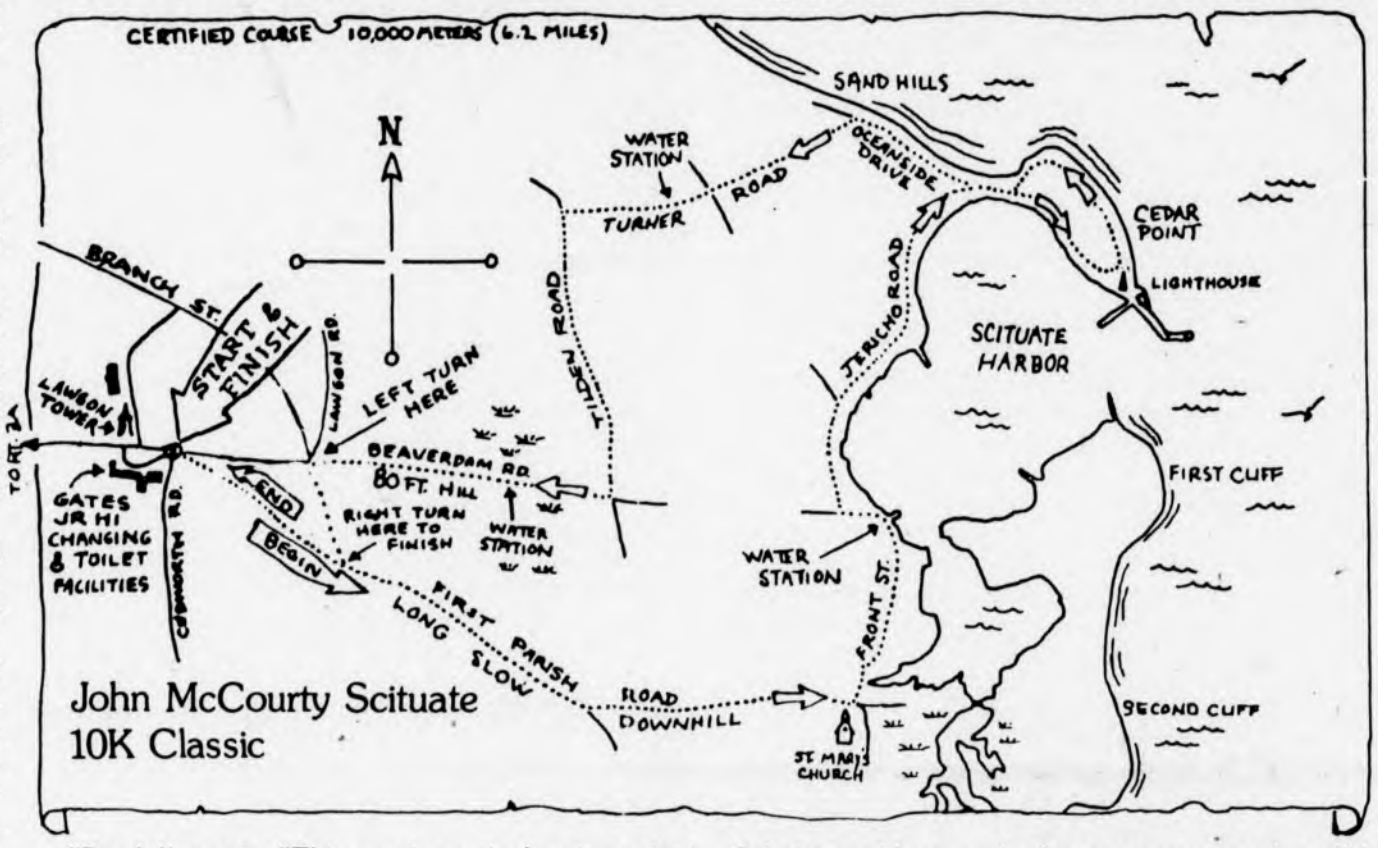
ROAD RACES

There are four main roadraces this summer in the immediate area and three of them occur during the July 4 holiday week.

SCITUATE RACE

The John McCourty Scituate 10K Classic will be held Sunday, July 1 at 9 a.m. sharp.

The race is 20 kilometers or 6.2 miles.



The race will begin at Gates Intermediate School on First Parish Raod, one half mile east of Route 3A.

The school is across the street from Lawson Tower.

The starter and honorary race director is Will Cloney, Director Emeritus of The Boston Marathon and the race will be videotaped by American Cablesystems.

The pre-race registration fee, by mail before June 23, is $5 and the post entry fee is $6.

Thirteen divisions, including the first male and female

"Pandolfe wrote, "This year is particulary important for Brandon and for young local baseball players aspiring to the professional leagues because it is the first year of a new program designed to produce top quality, potential professional players who excell to be recognized by college and professional scouts."

The entire Cranberry League includes Brockton, Easton, Providence, Whitman, Norwell, Plymouth and Scituate residents and a five person team prize will be awarded.

The Mud Slide Closet Band, an exciting live bluegrass music will entertain.

T-shirts will be given to all registered entrants and refreshments free to entrants will be Coke, hot dogs and yougurt.

Concerts, swimming and sports highlight Pembroke

By Moira McCarthy

Though it lacks the miles of oceanfront land common to most Mariner towns, Pembroke has a lot to offer to a summer enthusiast.

Whether it be a concert, a day of swimming, a taste of history or just a quiet afternoon of cooling off, Pembroke has it all.

"In the summer, it's hard to get away from the tourist rush," Pembroke resident Donna Molis said, "But once I get into Pembroke, I can really feel the difference. No traffic, and it even feels cooler. It's definitely quieter."

Her favorite event in Pembroke is the Pembroke Arts Festival.

"Maybe it's because I'm an artist myself, but the Art Festival is outstanding to me. It's always a treat."

The festival, staged on the rolling grass of the Town Green, (on Rte. 14, right in front of the Community Center) will be held Aug. 4-5 and and will feature a wide variety of events.

There's a juried art show, a juried photography show, all sorts of crafts, including eight artists working with wood right before your eyes. For children, there's an array of activities including a clown, children's art, and the ever-popular popcorn.

Entertainment will go on through the entire festival from 10 a.m. through midnight Aug. 4, and from 10 a.m. through midnight Aug. 5. There will be music until midnight Aug. 4.

The special event of the Festival is called "Sleepy LaBeef" and according to coordinators, you'll just have to go down there to find out. All are welcome.

For Chuck and Chickie Monahan of Pembroke, a favorite summer activity comes once a week all summer long, The Concerts on the Green.

Sponsored by the Rec. Dept. and supported mainly by local merchants, the concert series is considered a real family event. The series features different types of bands, from Irish, to swing, to pop, on the Town Green every Sunday night from 6 to 10 p.m.

The Recreation Commission works all winter planning these concerts and the effort shows. They're free, fun and run all the way through Labor Day weekend.

And though it doesn't have the ocean, Pembroke does have a vast array of ponds, making it look like the Minnesota of the South Shore.

The Town Landing, off Wompatuck Street, is the most popular of the swimming spots in Pembroke.

Often it's a good idea to get there early to grab a parking spot and sunbathing spot. And leave your dog at home. Although there are no leash laws in Pembroke, officials frown on dogs roaming the beach.

Another popular swimming spot is the Little Sandy Beach, on Rte 27, right outside the Bryantville area of town. Little Sand, some say, takes less of the brunt of the crowd on a hot summer day.

Again, it's advised to get there early to really enjoy a good spot on the beach.

"Pond swimming can be fun in a different way than the ocean," Pembroke resident Maura Hogan said, "I don't worry as much about the kids in the smaller area of beach than the ocean. And it so much less crowded."

When you're not in the mood for beaching it, an historical tour of Pembroke might be in order.

The Historical Society Museum, on Rte. 14 in the Center of town, is the best place to start. The museum, opened most weekkdays, houses an array of totally Pembroke artifacts from the beginning of American history. You can view clothing, a genuine school room, all sorts of amazing tools, and just about everything needed to exist in the 17th and 18th century.

From there, historical experts can point you to the Adah Hall house, just down the road, or to the Old Quaker Meeting House on Rte 139, or on a tour of the hundreds of old, old, and yet still beautiful Pembroke homes. They are a sight to see.

And although the herring aren't exactly jumping out at you, Pembroke's herring run is a great place to take the kids, or a date, for a cool afternoon picnic.

Surrounded by majestic trees, the herring run babbles (although sometimes mutely) through town all year long. The grass is wellkept there, and there is plenty of room to park. With a checked blanket and some good fried chicken, it could make a hot summer day cool, comfortable and a lot of fun.

True, Pembroke lacks the ocean, and goes completely unnoticed by some South Shore residents. But in fact, there's a lot more to Pembroke than a Burger King and movie theatre (although those two do provide good entertainment for a rainy day). Pembroke is a lovely town, a town you can only appreciate by stepping into.

South Shore residents should hop in their cars and see what it's all about. Away from the water, but right in the middle of the fun. That's Pembroke.

Starting at South Junior High at 8 a.m., the runners will traverse the 4.6 mile Main Street course, finishing under the American flag at Loring Hall in Hingham Square.

This year the race will benefit both the Hingham High School Scholarship Fund and a new track facility at the school.

Simons Greenhouse has 'pick-your-own' strawberries

It's strawberry season once again—the best time to enjoy freshly picked, red-ripe strawberries at their peak of flavor.

One way to keep the cost down and ensure freshness is to visit a "pick-your-own" strawberry farm.

In this immediate area, the state has listed Simons Greenhouse, 124 Stetson Rd.,in Scituate,(545-2400). From Routes 53 and 123 intersection, take Rte. 123 east for five miles. The greenhouse is on the left side, and is open daily 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The minimum age in the field is 9 years old.

The local strawberry season is a little late this year because an unusually cold spring has delayed the harvest for at least one week. Picking didn't start until June 10 and will probably run until July 10, (provided a heat spell doesn't speed up ripening or a frost damage the crop!)

When selecting berries at Farmers Markets, local supermarkets, or roadside stands, choose glossy, firm berries with 75 to 100 percent red color and bright green caps attached. Avoid the appearance of moisture or decay. Medium to small berries are generally juicier and tastier.

After harvesting, refrigerate berries unwashed in a shallow container so air can circulate. Strawberries are highly perishable and should be used as quickly as possible. Leave caps on before washing. This prevents water from soaking into the berry which dilutes flavor and changes the texture.

Strawberries are a great source of vitamin C. One cup of raw, capped strawberries provides almost twice the recommended daily allowance for this vitamin with only 55 calories.

To enjoy native strawberries after the season has ended, freeze them for year-round use.

To freeze berries, a sugar or syrup pack will make a better quality frozen product than unsweetened pack.

For the sugar pack, sprinkle each quart (about 1 1/3 pounds) strawberries with 3/4 cup sugar and mix thoroughly until a juice forms. Pack in container with 1/2 inch head space, seal and freeze.

For a syrup, cover berries in container with cold 50% syrup (4 3/4 cups sugar to 4 cups water), seal and freeze.

Wampanoag Indians Trade With Pilgrims

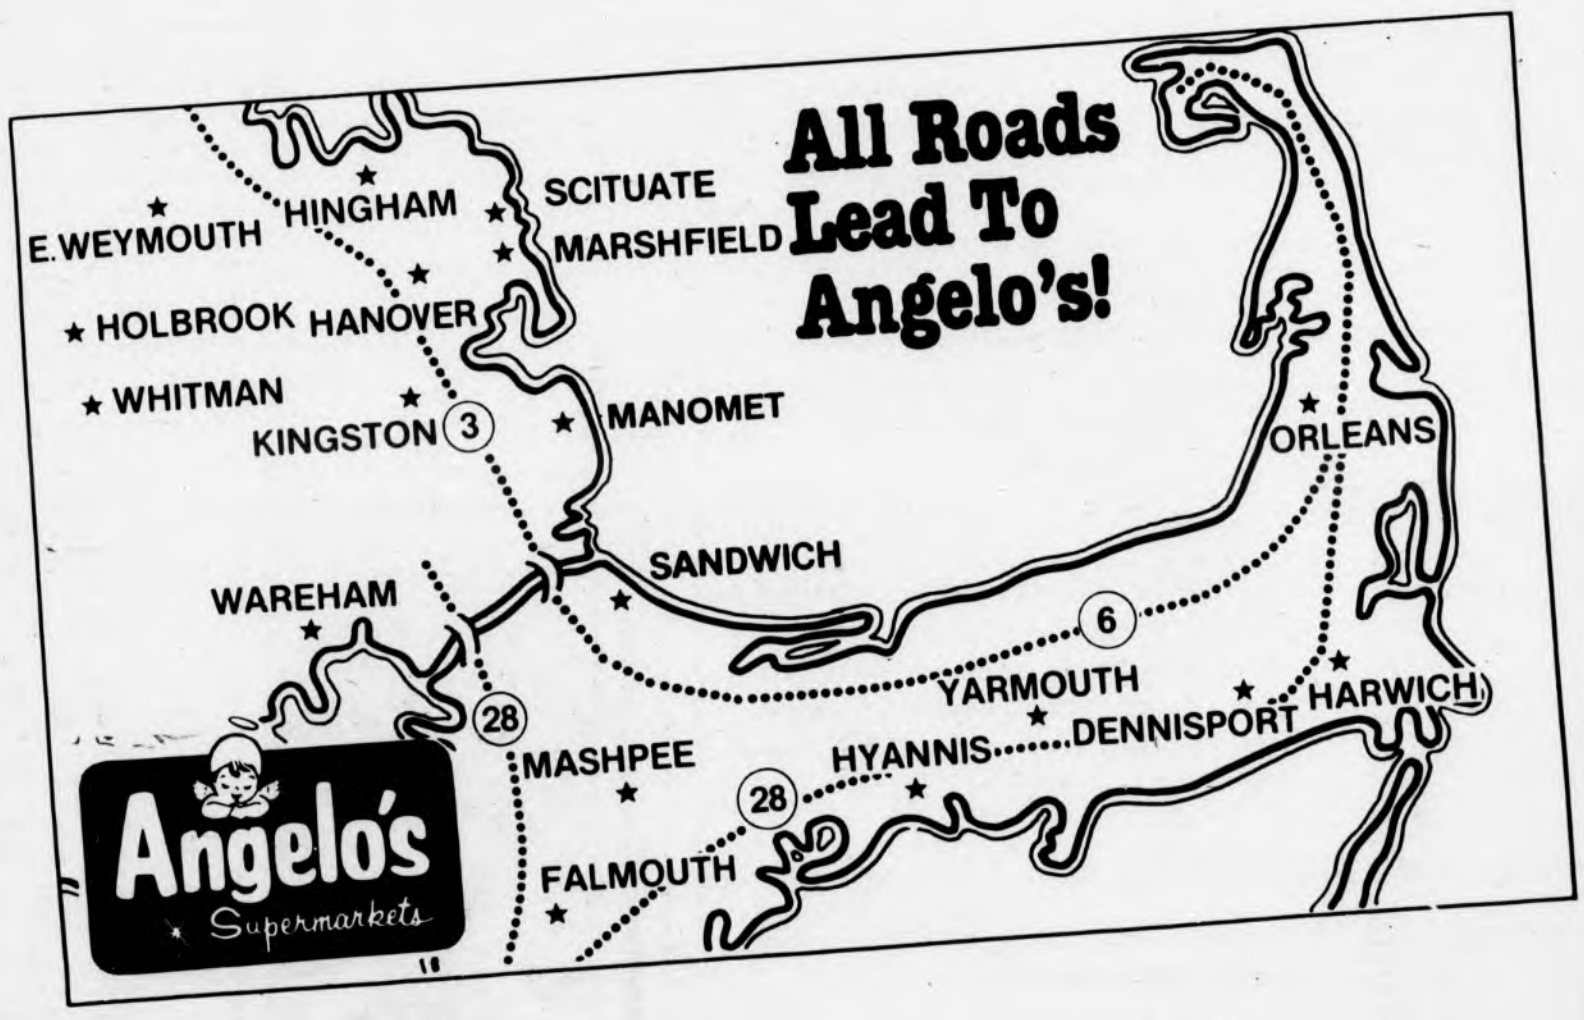
Wampanoag men will visit the 1627 Pilgrim Village Thursday, June 28 at 12:30 p.m. to trade beaver pelts for goods with the English colonists.

Visitors may observe the trading ritual which enabled the colonists to make payments on their debt to the Merchant Adventurers in London who financed the trip to Plymouth.

Plimouth Plantation is the outdoor living history museum of 17th century Plymouth. Its exhibits include the full scale replica Mayflower II, docked at State Pier in Plymouth, the 1627 Pilgrim Village and a Wampanoag Indian Campsite.

Located on Warren Avenue (Route 3A) three miles south of downtown Plymouth, the museum is open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission to the Pilgrim Village is $5.50 for adults, $3 for children, five to 13 years old. Children under five years old are admitted free.

Theatre Camp at Priscilla Beach



Applications are being received by the Priscilla Beach Theatre's Summer Program for children five through sixteen years old beginning June 28 to July 28, Thursday: 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. and Saturdays 5 to 7 p.m.

This workshop will study communication and acting skills and how they apply to a classical or contemporary children's play.

The June 28 workshop will study the new and exciting play, "The Sunflower War of Dragolena, the Witch" which is filled with the life stories of every fairyland character.

Angelo's...the Taste of Summer!

One of the truly nice things about Angelo's is our locations. We're located in some incredibly beautiful South Shore towns. Perfect places for visits or vacations. And if you're lucky enough to live year round on the South Shore you have an Angelo's to shop every week.

Find swimming, sunning, and shopping in Marshfield

By Judith Kirwan Kelley

While searching for the ideal location for our summer vacation, we rejected most for being either prohibitively expensive or too inconvenient to take our young children.

Our wants were few. We simply desired miles of sandy beaches, festive carnivals, historic landmarks, and reasonably priced restaurants. It would be nice also, we felt, if there were opportunities for golfing, tennis, boating, and shopping with a minimum of travel involved.

It seemed almost impossible that we would find all of these, and our research began. What we found was our own town. In Marshfield was all we wanted and more.

With five miles of coastline, ample opportunities for swimming and sunning are available at Brant Rock Beach, Burke's Beach, Rexhame Beach, Fieldston Beach, Green Harbor Beach, and Humarock Beach. So popular are Marshfield's beaches that the residency of the town increases by over 13,000 during the peak summer resort months.

From August 17 — August 26, the Marshfield Fair will be held providing enjoyment to our children as well as to ourselves. The Fair hosts thousands of visitors and area residents. Pari-mutuel racing is an event which draws many to the Marshfield Fair. Others come to see the exhibits of sheep, rabbits, and cattle. Quilting, cooking, and craft exhibits attract many more. The excitement of the Midway, the carnival rides, and the numerous refreshment stands have helped the Fair to remain a longstanding success in Marshfield.

Restaurants abound in the town. One can enjoy light takeout fare to sumptuous meals at anytime of the day in Marshfield.

In addition to the fast food establishments, Marshfield has hometown favorites such as "Arthur and Pat's," "Casa Berrini," "The Bridgwaye Inn," and "Bud's Seafood Galley."

The Great Balloon opens its wings.

For nature lovers, there are 1,000 acres of conservation land available for picknicking, hunting, fishing, hiking, and horseback riding. Twenty miles of rivers and streams are often used for canoeing and fishing.

We decided to devote one day of our vacation to learning the history of our town. Historical highlights worth visiting in Marshfield include:

1. The Office of Daniel Webster — located at Webster and Careswell St. This office was used by Webster

There's the 'Great Outdoors' in Norwell

By Milly Potter

Don't feel sorry for yourself if you're "stuck" in Norwell for the summer when friends take off for the seashore or mountains. There's plenty to do right here, for young and old, for individuals or families. Here are some of the things you can enjoy.

Recreation

What to do with the kids shouldn't be a problem. The Norwell Recreation Department is offering a full program of activities covering almost every child's interest.

Classes include tennis at the high school, swimming at Anderson's pool, gymnastics and wrestling at the high school gym, track, also at the high school, and sailing and rowing and canoeing at Jacob's Pond and on the North River.

New this year, in response to the popular craze, will be a course in break dancing in the Osborn School Cafeteria.

Special events include a Youth Dance July 13 at town hall, and a trip to a magic show in Beverly on July 25.

General recreational programs, offering sports and field trips, are also available.

Most programs have limited enrollment, so residents are advised to sign up early. Information on schedules and age brackets may be obtained by calling the recreation department at 659-7227.

Registration begins Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon at town hall. You may also register at the recreation department office on South Street starting June 25 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. until programs are filled.

The Great Outdoors

Norwell is rich in recreational areas, for all it lacks in frontage on the Atlantic. Boating, fishing, and hiking possibilities are plentiful.

South Shore Natural Science Center

For a fee of $15 for individuals or $25 for families with children under 18, you can join the 22-year old South Shore Natural Science Center on Jacob's Lane. Its multitude of offerings include family programs and festivals, gardens to study and mini-courses and lectures ranging from archaeology to wildlife.

In the summer, the focus is on the Nature Day Camp for children ages 4 through those entering sixth grade. Two sessions of six meetings each are offered for the younger "Chipmunks" through Aug. 1, with a choice of morning or afternoon hours. Older "Discoverers" may choose from three sessions, of 10 meetings, either three hours or five hours.

A special event on June 23 and 24 is an Indian Powwow with Chief One Bear and Wompanoag Indians. The event, which includes activities, crafts, refreshments and shows (Saturday at 2 and 4:30 p.m.; Sunday at 3 p.m.), will run from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The facility houses a display area, and a gift shop featuring books pamphlets, trail guides and instruments for natural science study.

The 28 acres include old farmland, pine groves and hardwood forest laced with nature trails. It's open Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 4 p.m.

Information on Science Center programs may be obtained by calling 659-2559.

Conservation Land

Why not run over to town hall and pick up a map of the town's conservation lands? Norwell residents can get them free at the town clerk's office; out-of-towners must pay a small fee.

Wesley H. Osborne, Jr., conservation agent, recommends Jacob's Pond — a 70 acre mill pond with an adjacent 200 acres. Canoeing and fishing are fine on the pond; there's also an exercise trail and hiking. Access is from Jacob's Lane, almost opposite the Science Center, and there is parking. Groups like Scouts who want to

Anderson Balloon Festival & Road Race July 21 & 22

When New England Salutes Maxie Anderson July 21 and 22, there's a good chance that residents who've always wanted to fly in a hot air balloon can do just that.

The balloon festival, to which 50 balloonists have been invited, will honor the late aeronaut Maxie Anderson with a two-day event at the high school complex. Proceeds will go toward the Maxie Anderson International Balloon Museum in Albuquerque, N.M.

And the raffle tickets that'll put sports in a hot air balloon for a ride over the South Shore area (as the wind goes), are on sale now. There is, said John Flagg Jr., head of the group planning the festival, about one chance in 20 of winning. Tickets are available at Flagg's office, 750 Webster St. or at the Mariner, 58 Main St. or at the Green Harbor Marina.

The balloons take flight in favorable weather at 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. Winning tickets will be drawn on the spot and participants must be there to take advantage of the opportunity.

Here are other events that will be part of the festival: two afternoons of music, featuring Yankee Jack (Pittorino) & his Downeast Pickers; Clare Alosa & Joy; Producer George Teran; Ann Marie & the Country Gold; Gene Caldwell; Deming & Brigham; the Grip, along with radio personalities Frank Murtagh of WATD, Bill Hess, WCAV and Bill Raymond of WKKL. There will also be square dancing and singalongs.

Maxie Anderson Road Race

On Saturday, July 21 there will be a Maxie Anderson Road Race. Ned Bangs of the Recreation Department is coordinating that event, along with daylong activities for young sports, to be part of the program at the school area.

Still underway are plans for a helicopter on the site, an antique car and truck exhibit, crafters and artisans, and much more.

The main feature, though, will be the colorful flights of the hot air balloons. Marshfield has two aeronauts in Flagg with the Flaggship and in Kenneth Lovell's Loveship & Spaceship.

People who wish to participate in the festival should contact Flagg to host balloon crews or to work on a committee as needs arise. For more information call 837-3128.

POWERBOAT RACE

The first annual Marina Bay 100 Offshore Powerboat Race will be held Saturday, June 30 and the host club for this year's priemer powerboat event of the summer is "Race New England."

The site of this race is Marina Bay (formerly known as Boston Harbor Marina), an ultra-modern marina which will be the staging area for the largest most spectacular powerboat water event in Boston this summer.

At 11:30 a.m. June 30, an expected fleet of thirty-five of the fastest offshore powerboats on the East Coast will parade out of Marina Bay through Boston Harbor for the start of the race.

The Marina Bay 100 will begin at noon, with a major part of the race course stretching off Nantasket Beach, Hull.

Nantasket Beach offers spectators the largest, best known ocean front in the Greater Boston Area. Up to 250,000 people could view this race.

The Marina Bay 100 isdirected by the National Powerboat Racing Association and is the second in a series of seven races held in the northeast.

The public is invited to watch the race. There is no admission.

Among the best viewing areas are: Marina Bay (this is the "pit" area and is always an exciting place to be before and after the race) and Nantasket Beach, the race will pass before the beach area six times from start to finish. The United States Coast Guard has designated a large spectator boat area off Nantasket Beach.

The events of the weekend include a cocktail party Friday, June 29 at Marina Bay at 7 p.m., the Marina Bay 100 at noon Saturday, June 30 and an awards banquet at Marina Bay following the race at 7 p.m. The public is invited to all these events.

Whale watch trip sails from Plymouth

The non-profit Web of Life Outdoor Education Center is again sponsoring whale watching trips for the public.

These spectacular 1/2 day trips depart historic Plymouth, each day June through August.

This couple of whales was sighted by whale watchers aboard the Captain John and Son. (Derr photo)

Among the most fascinating of living creatures, whales are in serious trouble throughout the oceans of the world.

Endangered as they are, whales migrate along the Massachusetts coast in considerable numbers offering a unique chance to observe an alternative life form.

The trip will be made upon the 85-foot double decked Captain John and Son, a modern whale watching vessel.

The Captain John and Son is equipped with twin turbo engines, heated cabin, rest rooms, snack bar and the latest navigational and safety equipment.

Operating out of Plymouth Harbor, the boat offers excellent views of the Mayflower, Plymouth Rock and other historical features.

A Web whale watch can be combined with a visit to the Ocean Spray Cranberry Museum, Mayflower II, Plymouth Rock, Plymouth National Wax Museum and Pilgrim Hall. All are within easy walking distance of the Town Wharf.

The Web of Life Outdoor Education Center is a private, non-profit educational institution committed to the development of awareness and appreciation for the natural environment. All proceeds are used for the continued development of environmental programming.

"Of course," I responded, "For less than $10 each, we can go for a twenty minute airplane ride at Shoreline Aviation, Marshfield's own Municipal Airport. We will have a bird's eye view of our town, see the Mayflower from the sky, or fly over Scituate." "Also," I added, "Two eighteen hole golf courses are available as are tennis courts, playgrounds, softball fields, bowling, and rollerskating." "And what," he asked, "would be your favorite way to enjoy our vacation?"

"Elementary, my dear husband," I answered. "I'd like to sit under the shady trees in Veterans' Memorial Park with an armfull of books for the entire week. I know now that you and the kids will have plenty to do!"

Try a taste of the good life in Hingham

By Judy Gilman

No matter what South Shore town we live in, we pass through surrounding towns often dozens of times a week in the course of going to work, doing errands or visiting friends. Then when it comes time to take a trip, the destination is far away.

Why not take a mini-trip to a nearby town, complete with staying overnight, and get to know it better?

Hingham's Main Street (Route 228) is, of course, well known for its magnificent collection of houses of many periods. But how many have actually taken time to visit the Old Ordinary's Toy Museum or take a close look at the interior of the Old Ship Church? An overnight stay can provide the leisure to do a little exploring in an area that may be close to one's home but that has many treasures to be found.

Let's assume you're going to spend about a day and a half in Hingham, arriving in early afternoon on one day, and returning home by 6 p.m. the next.

The first question, before any itinerary can be planned, is, where am I going to stay? There are two alternatives here, since Hingham is, admittedly, not well-known for an array of motels (not a single one exists within its limits). The first is to camp at Wompatuck State Park (off Route 228 at Free Street) for the night — the recreational facility run by the state's Department of Environmental Management. The park has several camping areas with hookups for RVs and trailers. This is the busy season, so call and make a reservation ahead of time (749-7160).

The second alternative appeals to those who like a touch of the good life with a little luxury thrown in. Mary Ansaldo runs a classic British-style bed and breakfast establishment in a late 17th century house (the Ripley House) next to Central Fire Station on Main Street just a skip and a jump from Hingham Centre and the Common, one of the main centers of town in colonial times. The beds are comfortable, coffee is served to your door in a silver service in the morning — in short, it is life with some gracious touches. Call 749-7011 well ahead to make reservations, as the number of guests possible is kept deliberately small for maximum pampering.

Now that you've got your accommodations established for the night, there's some time before dinner. You've driven by all those houses on Main Street set 'way back from the street by what seems to be two sets of lawns — but have you ever taken a close look? Leave your car at the intersection of South Pleasant and Main (with the several islands there, there is room to get the vehicle well off the street) and take a stroll, up one side and down the other of what is known as Glad Tidings Plain. Go just below the brow of the hill to get a good look at the "Rainbow House," a bow-roofed white and black beauty. Don't skip Second Parish Church, either. As its name indicates, it was the second church to be "gathered" in town, and is a fine example of what is usually considered to be a "typical" New England church.

If you pick your season right, you may well encounter Mrs. Loring selling her peaches on the lawn in front of her house, accompanied by her dog Teddy. "Magnificent" is too bland a word to describe these fuzzy beauties, and numerous paper napkins are a necessity to deal with the excess juice.

Time for dinner and where shall we eat? There are several excellent choices around, together with many well-known restaurants in neighboring towns, but we're sticking to the rules and making this a strictly-Hingham outing.

The Whiton House, near Queen Anne's Corner (Route 53) on Main Street is a favorite of many. The interiors are pleasing, the food is good, and the private dining rooms on the second floor are a particular delight. And with the coming of warm weather, tables have appeared on the front lawn so one can enjoy a drink and watch the world go by. Reservations are recommended.

The Olde Mill Grille has been perched on the edge of North and Summer Streets, rather like a ship's prow with one end of the building narrowing almost to a point (inside, the booths narrow to a two-man slot at the end) for many years. Fried clams, chowder, and other good things are the rule here in an informal atmosphere, together with a view of the harbor. Don't expect to find many empty sets in the bar, though — it's one of the smaller ones you'll encounter. And never on Tuesday, the Grille's day to close.

For a larger bar, go across the street to Page's, which also emphasizes seafood and a view of Hingham Harbor. Or, take a look at Fiddler's at the Granary, also within a stone's throw, that offers outside tables and Mexican fare among its eclectic selections.

What to do after dinner? The Loring Theatre in Hingham Square has first-run movies in a charmingly-restored theatre that's a nice change of pace after the all-too-familiar cubelike screening halls in shopping plazas. The prices are reasonable, and your feet won't stick to the floor. What more can you ask for?

Next morning, you have several choices for breakfast. If you're at Wompatuck, you can, of course, make your breakfast. Or you may want to try one of the establishments in Hingham Square. The British Relief on North Street in Hingham Square has croissants, muffins, donuts, bacon, juice, fresh melons, and excellent coffee. The Quarterboard, down North Street toward the harbor, serves traditional hearty breakfasts, as does Page's (together with a morning view of the harbor — the really hardy might have gotten up early and come down to the harbor for a look at the rising

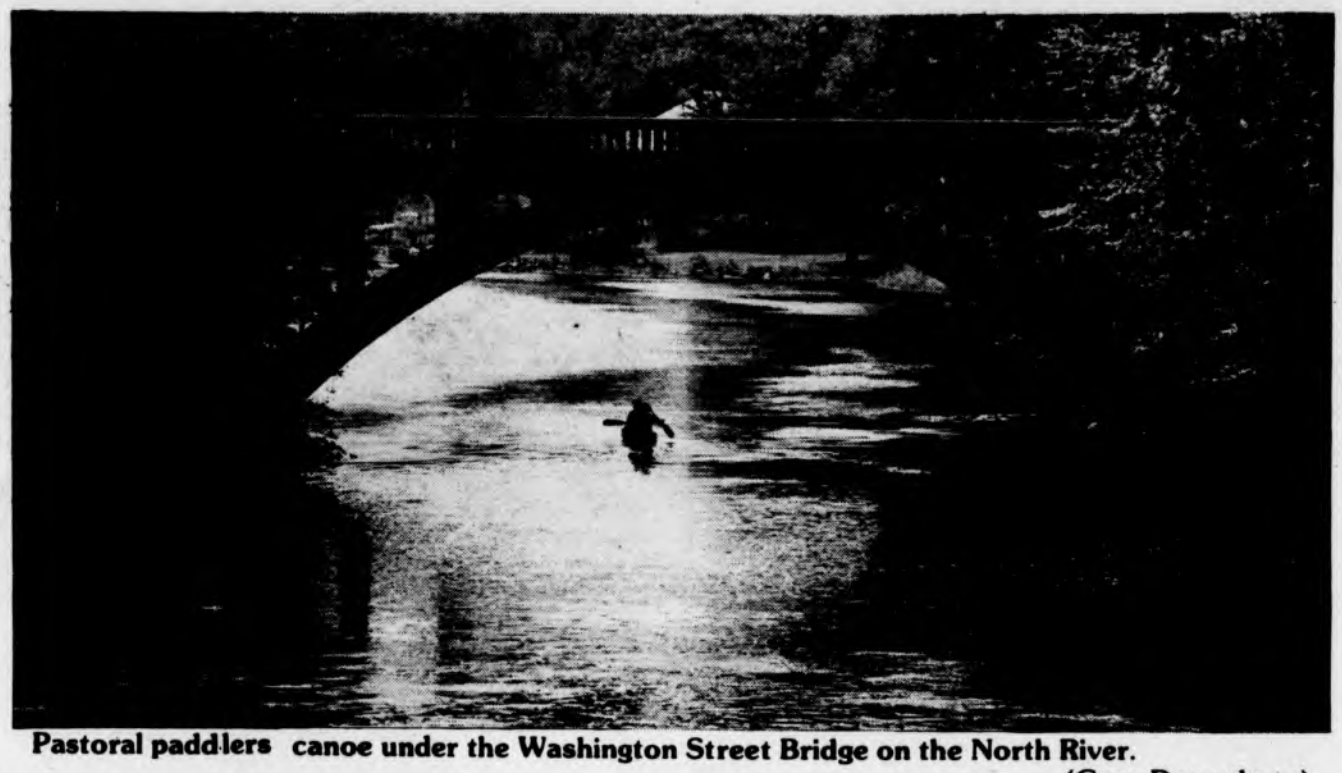
Hanover diversity offers bustling stores and history

By Judy Foley

Hanover in the summertime can be as diverse as the people who live in the town and the visitors who pass through.

In just a small area, you can find a modern shopping mall to browse in air-conditioned stores or seek shelter from the heat in a cool movie theatre, or a small, village-like center to browse through the archives of the Historical Research Room at the Curtis Library.

The town, unlike its neighboring communities, has no seashore, lakes or ponds to draw a heavy crowd of tourists in the summer, but it does share a small part of the North River, which winds across the southeast border to the Indian Head River. Boats, canoes and fishing expeditions are common sights along the tree-lined banks of the rivers where thriving factories were once Hanover's major industries.



Non-residents are apt to know Hanover best by its commercial district along Route 53, which is quickly becoming one of the South Shore's major shopping areas. On a typical weekend, traffic is heavy along the road from shoppers in and out of the growing number of stores and office parks cropping up beside existing businesses. The retail district has attracted several larger firms like Jordan Marsh and Grossman's, making Hanover more of a regional shopping center for the entire area.

But away from the bustling stores and traffic, Hanover takes on a charming air of a small town.

The picturesque center of town on Route 139 has no stores or restaurants, but there is always some activity here. The John Curtis Library offers special summer programs for both children and adults, and volunteers from local historical groups open the Hanover Historical Research Room at the library every Wednesday from 2 to 4 p.m. during July and August. Volunteers are also available then or by special arrangements to lead visitors through the historical Stetson House in the center.

Nearby at the Sylvester Field there is apt to be a Cranberry League baseball game in action or a summer evening concert on the green sponsored by the town's Park & Recrecation department. The Briggs Stables located a short distance away, offers horseback riding and also hosts several horse shows during the summer.

Swimming and tennis are available to families in two private clubs on Mill Street, just south of the Hanover Mall on Rte. 53. The Mill Pond Tennis Club and the Hanover Swim and Tennis Club attract members from Hanover and several surrounding towns.

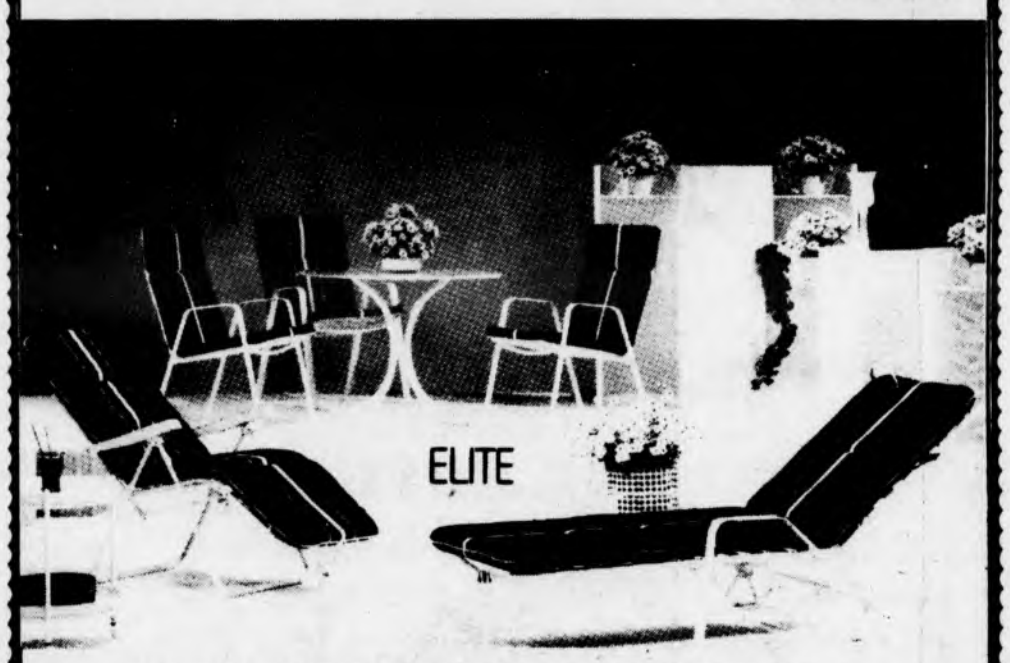
The outdoor club has 10 tennis courts, two adult pools including an Olympic-sized pool, a children's pool, plus children's activities like volleyball, baseball and arts and crafts.

The indoor club offers a children's all-sports camp from two to eight weeks with tennis and swimming instructions, games, arts and crafts and a physical fitness program. Ladies tennis league action is scheduled during the day, and ladies', men's and mixed doubles are held in the evening. The club also has a pro available for private instruction.

For just one afternoon's recreation, the Starland Amusement Park on Route 53 offers go-carts, miniature golf, a golf driving range, softball and baseball batting cages and an indoor video arcade.

Hanover is perhaps one of the quieter towns on the South Shore in the summer, but it provides a wide selection of summertime fun.

Cohasset historic tours listed



The Cohasset Historical Society has opened its two museums at Cohasset Center for the summer.

Through September 30, the Capt. John Wilson Historical House and the Maritime Museum will be open to the public each day Tuesday through Sunday from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Admission will be 75¢ per building for adults, 25¢ for children from six to 12 years, with Society members and their guests admitted free of charge.

Special pre-planned group tours can be arranged by contacting the Historical Society with admission of $1 per person for the two buildings. Please call 383-6930 or 383-0773 to plan special group tours.

The Maritime Museum, adjacent on Elm Street, houses a large gathering of relics dating from Cohasset's great "Age of Sail" when the town's main industry was cod and mackerel fishing. Memorabilia from the 19th century schooner fishing fleets can be seen there, as can relics from some of the numerous shipwrecks that occurred at the Cohasset Rocks during the 19th century.

First located at Cohasset Harbor, the building was moved to its present site at Cohasset Center in the 1950s.

A Scituate journey finds beaches, restaurants and the arts

By Mike Berger

Heritage Days, the K of C carnival, historical tours, Scituate beaches, summer reading at the library, the cool, shady areas of the West End and 30 restaurants with an assortment of seafood and summer treats.

Thesee are some of the attractions for a trip on Rte 123 or Rte 3A to Scituate.

The highlight of a Scituate summer is Heritage Days which is a special weekend planned for Aug. 10, 11 and 12. This weekend philosophically asks Scituate residents and visitors to reflect on the town.

What was the past? Where is Scituate today and where is the town going?

Heritage Days events, traditionally, have been planned to reflect the best of Scituate's culture and its people.

Of course, Scituate began its history with the sea and that is reflected in a seafood festival, the inspection of U.S.Coast Guard cutter and the annual Boat Parade.

Scituate is rich in arts and crafts and that is reflected in the Outdoor Crafts Fair on Front Street, photography show and woodcarving exhibit.

Last year's Heritage Days schedule included an evening Band Concert by the Satuit Band, Rotary Club Pancake Breakfast,merchants sidewalk bazaar, book sale at the Scituate Town Library, Crafts Fair and Raffle drawing.

HISTORICAL TOURS

Tours of six historical sites sponsored by the Scituate Historical Society display the inspiring and intriguing aspects of Scituate's past.

The Historical Society wil open all six historical sites which include the Old Scituate Lighthouse, the Cudworth House and Barn, the Lawson Tower, the Mann HistoricaL Museum, the Stockbridge Mill and the Old Oaken Bucket Homestead.

These tours are scheduled for July 15, Aug. 11-12 and Sept. 9.

Scituate has a variety of historical experiences offered in these sites. There is a lighthouse with a story of two teenage heroines of the War of 1812, a water tower with chimes, a working mill, homes which are classic example of early architecture and the homestead of a well-known American poet.

BEACHES

For crowds quiet sand, surf, sun or just plain fun, the Scituate coastline offers just enough of everything for a beach fan.

Each of the town's five beaches attract different segments of the town's population. For example there are the white cliffs of Scituate, the miles of uninhibited ocean, and the brown rocky ledges of Minot peeking from the blue horizon.

The beaches are Minot, Egypt, Sand Hills, Peggoty and Humarock.

As with all Scituate beaches, one must have that five dollar parking sticker emblazoned on the car window in order to park in these facilities.

Minot Beach is almost divided into two parts. There is one section nearest the parking lots which is adjacent to the Glades neighborhood and is noted for children hunting for crabs in shallow water.

The North Scituate section of Minot Beach is known for sun bathing. Minot is also noted as a beautiful beach with white sand lining the crystal, clear, cold and deep blue ocean.

Egypt Beach is a haven for mothers and children. Kool Aid is the most popular refreshment on this beach with peanutbutter, jelly sandwiches running a close second. There is a large parking facility on Hatherly Road. Lifeguards line the shore and swimming lessons are available for two weeks during the summer.

Sand Hills Beach is similiar in personality to Egypt. This is a neighborhood beach, populated mainly by nearby families with children and summer residents. The beach is divided between the public section which opens at the Turner Road intersection and the private area which is located toward the lighthouse.

In high tide, there is virtually no private beach as the water rises to the seawall protecting the residences. There is a parking lot for Scituate residents on Turner Road.

Next along the shore is another neighborhood beach, Peggoty Beach. A large parking lot welcomes residents who traveled across the Edward Foster Bridge to Peggoty's shores. This is another spot popular with children and parents.

One has an unobstructed view of the horizon from the waters off Peggoty. It is an attractive beach with a picturesque view of the white cliffs, lined with tall sea grass on the far end of the shore.

The last beach on Scituate's coastline is Humarock. This beach is popular with nonresidents who have found parking space without the necessity of a Scituate beach sticker. This beach is accessible from Marshfield and other surrounding communities.

There is a private section of Humarock Beach belonging to those residents whose property is taken over by waves during high tide.

From one end of the beach the lighthouse is in full view and from the far end, Marshfield seems only a stone's throw away.

RESTAURANTS

Why else come to Scituate? There are over 30 eating places here with seafood, meat and the traditional hot dogs and hamburgs.

Here is a complete list without any ratings. In alphabetical order they are Angelo's Lunch Counter, Barker Tavern, The New Bell Buoy, Blue Mooring, The Bread Board Bakery, Clam Haven Restaurant, Clipper Ship Restaurant, Country Store Restaurant, Dave's Brass Lantern, The Fritter Boat, The Gannet Grille, The Golden Rooster, Greenbush General Store Restaurant, Harbor House of Pizza and the Harborview Restaurant.

Others are Ebeneezer's Ice Cream and Bakery, J.C.'s Place, Maria's Sub Shop, MeetingHouse Inn, the camp out overnight must receive a permit from the conservation commission.

Another good spot is the Fogg reservation, 40 acres with access from Main Street near the center. It's primarily for hiking, and features a nice bridge across Black Pond Brook.

King's Landing on the North River off Main Street is a good place to fish from the river bank, according to Osborne.

Stetson Meadows offers nature trails, a picnic area, and birdwatching on its 122 acres. Access is from Stetson Shrine Road.

Off Dover Street, and stretching to the North River, is the Albert F. Norris Reservation, owned by the Trustees of Reservations. It's free, open until sunset, and features a half mile of salt marsh to explore. On the property are the remains of a grist mill and saw mill built in the late 17th century.

Osborne recommends that those interested in exploring other areas obtain one of the maps, which also lists the do's and don'ts for use of the land.

Baseball

Why bother with a hot, sticky drive to Fenway Park when you can stay right in Norwell to watch exciting baseball?

This year, there are not one, but two teams playing regularly at the high school field.

Now in its sixth year, the American Legion Samuel Turner Jr. Post 192 team began its season this past weekend. With a roster of 18 players drawn from Scituate and Norwell high school classes, the team competes with other Zone 10 communities of Brockton, Abington, Plymouth, Bridgewater, Easton and Duxbury. The home game schedule, furnished by coach Jim Murphy, is as follows:

June 20, Duxbury, 6 p.m.; June 24, Easton, 5 p.m.; July 1, Spartan Athletic Club of Brockton, 5 p.m.; July 2, Duxbury, 6 p.m.; July 4, Abington, 11 a.m.; July 8, Bridgewater, 5 p.m.; July 9, Brockton Post 36, 6 p.m.; July 11, Plymouth, 6 p.m. and July 18 Easton, 6 p.m.

New this year in Norwell are the semi-pro Norwell Mariners, a Cranberry League team composed of outstanding college ball players. Coach Joe Connolly explains that of the players in the eight league teams, perhaps 15 to 20 have played in the minor leagues, and another 10 to 15 will probably play in them. Fourteen of the 22-man roster come from Norwell.

The Mariners' remaining home games are:

June 28, Whitman, 6 p.m.; June 30, Hanover, 1 p.m.; July 1, a double-header against East Providence, noon; July 5, Easton, 6 p.m.; July 10, Whitman, 6 p.m.; July 14, Brockton, 1 p.m.; July 19, Bridgewater, 6 p.m.; July 21, a double-header against Plymouth 1 p.m.; and July 26, Hanover, 6 p.m.

Historic Sites

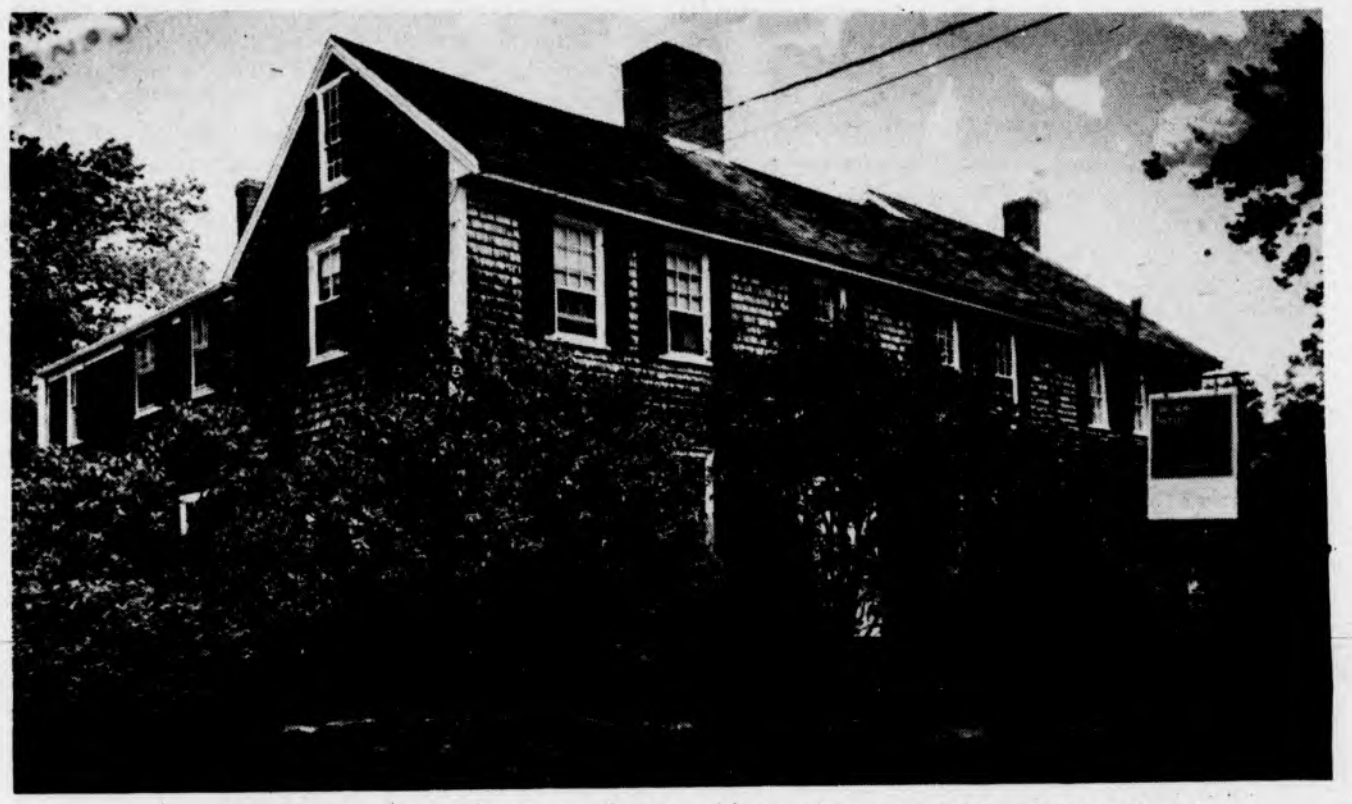
Norwell boasts some beautiful houses, a few dating back to the 17th century, others testifying to the town's prosperity in its heyday as a shipbuilding center. Most are in private hands still, and not open to the public.

One dwelling not to be missed is the 18th century Jacob's Farm at Jacob's Lane and Main Street.

Now owned by the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities and operated in cooperation with the Norwell Historical Society, the farmhouse is open Sundays from 1 to 5 p.m. through Sept. 30. Admission is $1.50, children under 12 are free.

Built in 1725, by Joshua Jacobs the house remained in the family until the early part of this century. Its furnishings reflect the changing styles and needs of the family over the generations. The barn houses a collection of firefighting tools.

Further information may be had by calling SPNEA at 227-3956.



Norwell's First Parish Church on River Street is the fifth church to stand on that site. The first was built in 1642 when the town was called South Scituate, and parishioners broke off from Scituate's First Parish Church in a disagreement over baptism. A former pastor was Samuel May, uncle of Louisa May Alcott.

The current church was built in 1830, and boasts a Paul Revere bell (recast), and an Aaron Willard clock.

The adjacent Kent House, built in the 1680's by James Bowker and given to the church in the 1930's, is closed this summer for repairs.

Those who wish to see the church other than during regular Sunday services should call the church office at 659-7122.

The James Library on West Street, an example of Victorian Lombard architecture, opened in 1874. It's a privately supported resource center open to the public Monday through Wednesday and Friday from 2 to 5 p.m.; Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m., and Saturday from 9 to noon. The telephone number is 659-4235 or 659-7100.

The Young People's Summer Theater will perform "On the Twentieth Century" Aug. 2-4 at 8 p.m. at Scituate High School. Tickets are $4 for adults and $3 for children.

Saturday, July 7, the Prelude Concert Series will present, "The Empire Brass Quintet." This group will perform works by Albinoni, Bach, Mozart, Handel, Bolling, Saches, Bernstein and Clarke at the Scituate Town Library, Branch Street.

Tickets are $6. They can be purchased in advance by calling 545-0238 or at the door the evening of the performance.

The Scituate Recreation Band, "Satuit Band" will begin their concerts at 8 p.m. June 29, July 6, July 20, Aug. 3, Aug. 10 and Aug. 24. The two-hour concerts are held on the bandstand on Cole Parkway.

The Scituate Public Library, a beautifully constructed library with an excellent children's program, is open Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday. Hours are 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Wednesday, Thursday 1 to 9 p.m. and Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Two events which are usually scheduled for the summer but won't be held this year are a Summer House Tour and the Scituate Arts Festival. Because of organizational problem, both events will be planned for next year.

BUILDING FUND DONATION

The good life of Hingham . . .

If you're staying at the Ripley House, there is a variety of good things to eat without your having to set foot outside the door.

Or stop at one of the numerous bakeries in town (Ebeneezer's in Hingham Center, Bartlett's in the Square, or Montilio's at the Harbor) for some breakfast baked goods and a cup of coffee.

After breakfast is out of the way, how about a stroll through Bare Cove Park, one of Hingham's newest parklands and a portion of what was the former Naval Ammunition Depot off Beal Street? The winding path leads down to the Back River, where birds swoop and cry. It is difficult to imagine that in World War II this docking area was a bustling, 24-hour-a-day operation as it supplied ordnance for the entire North American fleet. Today the Back River has returned to some of its peace and quiet, thanks in large part to the efforts of the joint Hingham-Weymouth Back River Committee. A portion of the river (that flows by Bare Cove Park) has been designated an Area of Critical Environmental Concern, which should help to preserve both its natural undeveloped look and the estuarine life it supports.

After this look at nature, head back to Hingham Square for a look, however brief or lengthy you want to make it, of some of the historical tourist musts of town. Within two blocks of Hingham Square are numerous historical buildings, churches, and collections that will attract and amuse even the most lukewarm history buff.

Perhaps the most famous is the Old Ship Church, which recently celebrated its 350th anniversary as the oldest ecclesiastical building in continuous use in the country. The name derives from the ceiling beams, which resemble a ship turned bottom up. In colonial times the church on its hillside was a landmark for sailors many miles at sea.

Across the street from the church is the Old Ship Parish House, saved in a community effort several years ago and preserved in its former splendor.

Before leaving Old Ship, take a look at the Memorial Bell Tower which is adjacent to it. The tower holds a full ring of bells and change-ringing in the English style, where mathematical combinations of the bells, rather than tunes, are played every Friday night. Some say it's an acquired taste.

Coming into Hingham Square is the impressive mass that is Old Derby Academy, yellow with green shutters and a fine example of Federal. Derby Academy, now located on Burditt Avenue about a mile from the Square, is this year celebrating its 200th anniversary, and is the nation's oldest coeducational school. Behind the Academy building is a fine 18th and 19th century garden.

At Main and South Street take a left down South to the next block at Central. Here is the Hingham Community Center, also known as the Ensign Thaxter House, another 17th century building that once served as the inn and tavern for the time. The paintings on the paneling in the front room are characteristic of the period and charming.

Take Central Street to North and take a look at New North Church, which abuts the Lincoln Statue and Fountain Square (the fountain has, of course, disappeared in these days of motor vehicles). New North was designed by the noted architect, Charles Bulfinch, who also was the architect that designed the State House in Boston.

Abraham Lincoln is rather prominent in town because his grandfather, General Benjamin Lincoln, hailed from here. A Revolutionary War hero, General Lincoln received Cornwallis' sword at the surrender at Yorktown, (Revolutionary War buffs will recall that Cornwallis did not show up at the actual surrender ceremony, but sent one of his officers. George Washington, not to be outmaneuvered, did the same.) General Lincoln's house is just around the corner from the statue on North Street.

Go beyond New North Church on what is now Lincoln Street and you will encounter the Old Ordinary, once an inn, now a museum and full of fascinating facts about Hingham in its years as a shipping and manufacturing center. The Garden Club maintains an 18th century garden behind the museum in keeping with the period. One of the museum's most outstanding exhibits is "Seen But Not Heard," a collection of children's toys, including some prized mechanical toys, many of which were made in Hingham.

Time for lunch, and how about making it a picnic? Head back to Hingham Square and here you have, again, several choices. The British Relief has interesting sandwiches and soups and salads to go. Brigham's, up Main Street, does as well. And Something Nice, across the street from the Community Center on South Street, not only constructs magnificent sandwiches but includes as well, a sampling of a prepared salad and "something nice" for your sweet tooth.

No matter what your preference, collect your goodies and head for World's End, the promontory of land that makes up one side of Hingham Harbor and provides a view toward Hull.

Frederick Law Olmstead, the noted park designer who is also credited with New York's Central Park and the entire "Emerald Necklace" of the Boston park system, designed World's End to provide a rolling vista of fields, trees and ocean, and so it does, together with offering the pleasantest picnicking around. Please, don't plan on any cooking there, though. It's not allowed.

A leisurely lunch and, perhaps, a slight doze in the sun — and your Hingham visit is almost over. It's been a lot like many other brief, unstructured vacation stops — except that it was in your own backyard.

vol. VI, no. 38 | thursday, july 5, 1984 | 30 cents

This election is history

By Jane Lane

There will be no recount, no further special elections. Two and one-half months later,the townspeople have spoken in definitive terms

Mary Jane McArthur will remain a Cohasset selectman for the next three years.

Last Saturday's special runoff election between McArthur and Golden concluded in one of the largest voter turnouts in recent memory. And they spoke in no uncertain terms, re-electing McArthur by a 2-1 margin.

Fifty-four percent, or 2519 of the 4620 Cohasset voters, cast their ballots in this first-ever runoff election. McArthur was victorious with a 1623 total; challenger Golden netted 867 votes.

Saturday evening, about 50 people mingled in the rear of the town hall auditorium, awaiting election results. About 8:05 p.m. the final tally was prepared and read to the anxious listeners.

The observers, who minutes before huddled in animated conversation with each other, now stared in hushed silence as Dominic Baccari read the tally sheet.

Unlike the April election when Golden won more votes in Precinct One , McArthur was victorious in both precincts. Saturday, McArthur took both areas, by 959 and 664, for a total of 1623 votes. Golden was defeated townwide, with a total of 350 in Precinct One and 517 in her neighborhood, Precinct Two.

Precinct One voters came out en masse, with a total of 1320 voters casting ballots. Precinct Two had a turnout of 1199 voters. There were a total of 29 blanks.

Sitting inside the "Doris-mobile" which has been used throughout her long campaign, Golden was informed of her defeat by daughter Kerry, and she reflected on the campaign.

As her husband Jack noted, there were no tears shed that night. "She's a strong woman," he proudly claimed.

The most important issue now facing the challenger is a vacation, she said. For three weeks the Golden family will be resting on Nantucket Island, their thoughts- and concerns miles away from Cohasset.

"Right now, " she laughed, "I don't want to see anyone. But Jack and I are survivors - we've been that way for many years. We'll get through this, too."

In retrospect, she feels that townspeople disapproved of her challenging the recount in court. "I think they blamed me for the cost of this election," she commented.

"But Mary Jane won fair and square and I wish her the very best," Golden noted.

"If I did anything, I think I opened up the eyes of a lot of people," she added. "And if I had to do it all again, I would the very same thing. I stood up for what I believed in and I would do it all again the same way." A neighbor, sitting aside her in the mobile, patted Golden on the back and quietly added, "you're still a winner to us."

For McArthur, it's quickly back to business as selectmen called an emergency meeting Monday to Voters stroll in and out of Town Hall during Saturday's election. If plans to convert the auditorium are adopted, where will future elections take place? (Rose Cundari)

Town Hall conversion could be 'disaster'

If plans to convert the town hall auditorium to municipal offices are finalized, "it will be a disaster - the end of the Cohasset Dramatic Club as we have known it for the past 63 years," according to its vice president, David Wadsworth.

Selectmen last week recommended the conversion, based on a desperate need for additional office space and meeting rooms for the town's numerous committees and boards.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said in the past week his office has received only one complaint regarding the proposed conversion.

Wadsworth, however, said the dismantling of the auditorium stage would spell the demise of local productions by the Cohasset Dramatic Club. A committee was formed earlier this year when club members were informed the auditorium could be slated for renovation. That committee searched for months for an alternative stage on which their plays could be produced, but none have been found in Cohasset, Wadsworth said.

If the dramatic club is to stay in existance, a stage must be found, but it will probably be within another town, he added.

"We have a very fine stage facility at town hall," he said. "It is far superior for our needs than anything else in town. If the stage is eliminated, it will be a major blow to the dramatic club. It could be the end to the operation of the Cohasset Dramatic Club as we have

Gwinn to submit resignation

Sewer Commissioner Joseph Gwinn informed his fellow members last week that he intends to offer his resignation from that board.

He has not written an official letter, nor has he submitted official notification to selectmen, but it remains his intention to resign from the position he has held since 1980.

Conflicting viewpoints on a plan to sewer the town has prompted Gwinn's resignation from the commission. It has been his contention since his election to the commission, that the town should construct a sewer treatment plant and proceed with a central plan as specified in the Metcalf and Eddy report.

Gwinn was a member of the commission along with Jan Daggett and Gerald Stanton when they resigned in protest over an alternative sewer plan. Gwinn remained and was re-elected in 1982 to a three-year term. It was his intention to fight the innovative and alternative plan and to sway the town back to the originally-accepted Metcalf and Eddy report.

Throughout the town's scrunity of the Ward Engineering alternative plan, Gwinn fought alone -attempting to convince the town that the plan will not receive adequate state and federal funding. It was his opinion that the Metcalf and Eddy plan will, in the long run, be the less expensive alternative since funding had previously been guaranteed.

"I'm just not interested in not building a sewer plant," Gwinn explained as his reason for quitting the post. Although his three-year term expires in April, 1985, Gwinn felt it was time to vacate the commission.

Gjesteby Elected To MAPC

Martha Gjesteby of Cohasset, was recently elected to the Executive Committee of the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC). The largest of 13 regional planning agencies in Massachusetts, MAPC provides planning and technical assistance to 101 cities and towns in metropolitan Boston.

Gjesteby, an MAPC representative since 1981, also serves on MAPC's Transportation Technical Advisory Committee, and is a former member of the town's planning board and capital budget committee.

The 25-member Executive Committee, which serves a one-year term, will supervise the Council's operations, including its work program, executive director and staff, and the $1.1 million 1984-5 budget. The Committee comprises five members each from the Council's cities, towns, gubernatorial appointees and ex officio members, plus the four Council officers and immediate past president.

Shamie meeting

A well attended organizational meeting for Ray Shamie for Senator was held in the Cushing Room, Cushing Plaza in Cohasset on Monday evening.

Lillian M. Murray, Shamie Coodinator for Southeastern Massachusetts, Cape Cod and the Islands conducted the meeting.

Murray explained the plans for the next several months of Shamie's Senatorial Campaign. Many activities have been set and Murray commented on the great support from all age groups for Ray Shamie.

Lillian urged those present to seek out the Independent voter and urge their support for Shamie.

Ray Shamie ran for United States Senator two years ago and fared very well considering the fact he was unknown at the beginning of that campaign.

Murray urges anyone who wants to work in the Shamie Campaign to contact her at home or at Shamie headquarters 338-6077.

No town land for Hugo

Selectmen decided last week not to allow Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant to lease town-owned land on Government Island for additional parking by patrons.

Mary Jane McArthur warned board members that allowing Hugo's to lease the town-owned land would be contrary to their previous decision not to allow Litchfield Express Co. to use Bayberry Lane land for parking company trucks.

Although selectmen had been negotiating for more than a year with Hugo's for the right to use the parking facility, the board agreed it would be unfair to allow the business to lease the land when they recently denied a similar use of town property to Barron Salvador, owner of Litchfield Express.

Harrington's liquor license

Selectmen did not revoke the seven-day, all alcohol license held by the bankrupt Harrington's Restaurant, at their meeting last week.

Two weeks ago the license was put up for bid and sold for $1500 in a liquidation sale of all Harrington's Restaurant assets. The new license owners will have to appear in court to have the license revoked and must then apply for a new license.

In the meantime, Executive Secretary Mark Lanza will take possession of the license until a court decides to revoke it.

Relief for Parker Ave.

In an effort to abate the noise and nightly gathering of youths along Parker Avenue, selectmen decided a barricade should be constructed along the entrance to the waterfront.

They instructed Highway Supt. Harold Litchfield to place boulders and to install a gate at the entrance to the landing where youths congregate each night.

Although a gate would be a costly installation, selectmen suggested the gate now located at the far end of Sandy Beach may be transferred to the Parker Avenue site.

Music Circus Changes

Ron Rawson, producer at South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset, has announced a re-scheduled date for the recently cancelled Air Supply concert as well as two added performances for Englebert Humperdinck's engagement in August.

Air Supply, originally scheduled Thursday, June 28, has been re-scheduled for 1 p.m. Sunday August 12. The original tickets are valid for this new date. Patrons who cannot attend the concert on the new date may receive a refund by returning their tickets to the point of purchase by July 15.

Englebert Humperdinck, originally scheduled for five days, August 28 through September 1, will give two additional concerts at 4 and 8 p.m. Labor Day, Monday September 3.

For further information, patrons may call the Music Circus at 383-1400.

CORRECTION

There was an erroneous headline printed in last week's Cohasset Mariner. Lew Crampton announced his candidacy for the U.S. Congress not the Senate, as printed. Crampton is seeking the Republican nomination.

Any hard-core Sherlock Holmes fan will delight in visiting the museum dedicated to preserving the legend of the master detective. Only a block from London's Trafalgar Square, at 10 Northumberland Avenue, the "Sherlock Holmes Pub" lures visitors from all over the world. The great detective's fictional study is scrupulously reconstructed on the pub's second floor. Seemingly, every item mentioned in the stories is found in the cluttered study, from his violin and boxing gloves to his cape and magnifying glass. Downstairs the entire pub is richly decorated with Holmesiana. Studying the maps and mementos provides fine entertainment while having a cool drink. Much of the collection was assembled by Arthur Conan Doyle's daughter.

discuss the Atlantic Avenue construction. She barely had time to savor her victory before the town's business interrupted.

McArthur said she was surprised at the wide margin of her victory and noted, "it's obvious from the large voter turnout that people gave this election a lot of serious thought."

McArthur expressed her delight three weeks ago when a Superior Court judge ruled on a special runoff election. At that time McArthur stated it would give the town a second opportunity to make clear its choice of elected leaders.

As she reflected on her overwhelming victory Saturday, McArthur noted, "I am very grateful for the confidence the town has shown me and I will try to do the very best job I can." But not before she and her family slip away for a well-deserved vacation in Maine.

As Golden humorously noted to supporters and well-wishers that gathered around her in the mobile, as the bright sunlight gave way to the dusk Saturday night, "three more months of this campaign, and I could have had a baby. At least I would have had something to show for all this."

Stage conversion causes concern known it for the past 63 years."

The club produces three major plays per year on the town hall stage. The first production staged by the club was in 1921, a comedy entitled "Nothing But The Truth."

Last Monday, selectmen by a 4 to 1 vote proclaimed town hall, including the auditorium, "be dedicated to conducting town business."

"If this is going to be a municipal building, I don't see the need for an auditorium and a stage," Selectman John DeBassio said. "It's a disgrace we don't have a place we can meet in a proper atmosphere."

Sole dissenter Rocco Laugelle argued in favor of retaining the auditorium, and warned that the idea of converting to office space won't go over well with town residents.

"This auditorium is still Cohasset," Laugelle said. "No ifs, ands or buts about it. As much as some of you would like to see it (converted), it's still Cohasset . . . we've all felt that this is home."

Members of the Town Hall Study Committee appeared before the board Monday to get a feel for Selectmen's preference in developing needed additional office space.

Committee Chairman Benjamin Blake told selectmen a number of options were studied before the group agreed on the best solution. These options included: tearing down the town hall and constructing a new building; remodeling the existing building; building an addition to the structure; moving town office to another building; and building a new building at some other site in town.

"After weighing our options, we agree with the last committee to study this, that this building is adequate to take care of the needs of the town for the immediate future," Blake said. "We feel it is sizeable and sound enough to be made into suitable office space for town offices."

Selectmen agreed that a new building is not needed,

Chamber moves for a promising future in Cohasset

By Jeff Giles

The idea is simple: development without damage. For the town of Cohasset, it would mean the generation of new tax dollars through a tastefully-expanded business community. For the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, it would mean a very good year.

John Hagerty, owner of Cohasset Colonials and Vice President of Public Relations, is in charge of selling this ideal. For him, myths and misconceptions are the greatest danger.

'When some people think business, they think factories, trucks, and tour buses,' he says. Hagerty and his fellow Chamber members think of boosted revenues, of a healthier business climate, an of a town with a more promising outlook on the future. Increased profitability for local businesses, attracting more commerce while providing more resources for the needs of the town — it's an enticing proposition.

First a citizen and second, a businessman- this is the hallmark the Chamber strives after. The focus is on exchanging ideas and investigating opportunities, not sacrificing principle for profit.

When the Chamber first began to take shape in September, 1983, its proponents promised to bring together 'business people, homeowners, local representatives, and town officials as one non-exclusive group.' Today, with less than a year behind them, they have developed a responsible forum for the discussion of issues ranging from the improvement of the sewer system to the drug and alcohol problem in the town's schools.

Moreover, the Chamber has instituted a seminar program in an effort to educate its members on matters of business, accounting, and law. While many of the short range projects such as buying trash barrels for the town are tactics of diplomacy, they suggest a sincere concern for the welfare of the entire community rather than strictly the business sector.

The Village and Harbor Association, which at one time sought out much the same ends as The Chamber of Commerce, was a failure, Hagerty believes, because it lacked national backing. With The South Shore Chamber of Commerce still one of the most active in the country, Cohasset's Chamber has a reliable and consistent source of assistance behind it. Hagerty is excited about the group's potential.

Nearly every member of the Chamber's executive board has a controlling interest in one of the town's more ambitious businesses. President Dan Leahy is general manager of Cohasset by the Sea. Brian Noble, of Noble's Camera, is Vice President in charge of Business Development. Other members include: Ed Goff of Goff Co., Linda Peters from Sea 'N Cheese, Joe Quinn, Cynthia Peters, and James Kearney.

Hagerty believes that the $100 a year membership dues may alienate many small business owners who are still waiting for the Chamber to prove itself. Aside from the seminar programs, members are provided with low cost medical insurance, a government liaison service, a professional staff on call, and various economic advisory resources.

In an effort to encourage commitment on the part of the townspeople, the Chamber has voted to restrict meetings to members only. While this would certainly make suspect the 'non-exclusive' nature of their charter, Hagerty feels that financial backing must be guaranteed if progress is to continue. The sucess with which the Chamber will be able to 'bring together disparate elements of the community' once the meetings are closed remains to be seen.

As one response to Cohasset's highly restrictive sign controls, the Chamber is in process of printing and distributing a map of the town's business community which will help take the place of off-property signs which have been made illegal. Only signs pre-dating this legislation can be used to direct traffic to business sites. These controls, coupled with severe zoning laws, represent the most serious threat to the growth of business, Hagerty believes.

The Cohasset Chamber of Commerce's next meeting, and quite possibly the last open to the public, will take place July 10 in the Cushing Room at the Cushing Plaza at 6:15 p.m. At this meeting, the town's selectmen will address the membership and discuss the Chamber's outlook for the years to come.

John Hagerty feels confident that the Chamber is well on its way. Its ability to provide a 'non- aligned and a non-threatening' group for the confrontation of the town's needs has already begun to get results and more are expected.

'If you want something done, you give it to a busy person. None of these people are bored. But like me, they perceive that this is an organization which is going somewhere,' he says.

Officials discuss construction work

The dust has settled and although blasting will continue this week on Atlantic Avenue, tension surrounding last week's incident has eased.

Selectmen and water commissioners called a meeting Monday night to discuss the construction along Atlantic Avenue. Together with the water commissioners, Water Supt. Ben Curley, Safety Officer Cliff Jones, and Fire Chief Martin Dooley, they discussed ways in which a future mishap can be avoided. SEA Consultants, the supervising engineering firm for the construction work, was represented by engineer Frederick Aufiero.

The meeting was a result of the incident which occurred last Monday morning when a blast set off by Geneva Construction propelled rocks and debris into the Atlantic Avenue home of Michael Russell.

The construction, which has interrupted life along Atlantic Avenue since May 29, is expected to conclude Aug. 7, according to SEA engineers.

Until that time, selectmen voted Monday night, on advice from Officer Jones, to restrict traffic flow along Atlantic Avenue from Kimball's By The Sea, to Beach Street, to one-way. Dangerous conditions resulting from digging and blasting warranted the temporary restriction, according to selectmen.

In an attempt to avoid a future incident such as last Monday's, the contractor, who did not attend the emergency meeting, will notify the fire department and one firefighter will witness all blasting work.

According to engineer Aufiero, because of the excessive amount of granite ledge in the area, blasting will be occurring daily until completion of the project. He said this area of Atlantic Avenue is filled with ledge and since the water mains must be constructed six and a half feet underground, the rock must be blasted clear of the site.

"Parts of this job have been very difficult," he explained, adding that the depth of the ledge and the narrow winding street increase the hazardous conditions.

Aufiero defended the work completed by Geneva Construction, saying a senior SEA engineer observed blasting this past Monday and noted the procedure was "not unreasonable - he had no problems with Geneva Construction at all."

Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis, who also attended the meeting Monday night, explained the commission's concern with possible damage to the sewer pipe from previous explosions.

In some areas of Atlantic Avenue, the sewer pipe was constructed in close proximity to the water main which was installed later. Blasting in some cases caused detectable damage to the sewer pipe, which was later repaired by the contractors.

But the commission remains concerned about possible damage from the blasts which has gone unnoticed. The commission requested that the Water Commission, through the bonded insurance placed on the contractors, pay for the pipes to be televised, in order to detect unseen damage.

The water commission has agreed to request the procedure after the project is complete, Water Commissioner Lot Bates explained to selectmen.

At the sewer commission meeting last week, DeSantis said the sewer pipe had been severed near the Stockbridge and Margin Street area. The pipe was laid open while raw sewage flowed into the surrounding ground.

Two other house connections were severed in that area in later blasts, he explained, and repairs were also made. DeSantis said the raw sewage flow was not as serious as it could have been. The damage to the two or three affected homes occurred in mid-afternoon in a non-peak area, he explained. The untreated material quickly disappated into the ground and the pipes were fixed.

"What we're concerned with, is the long term effects of these repairs. This area is affected by the tides and if the connections aren't tight, there could be a leak that we haven't seen yet," DeSantis said.

Chief Dooley said he has witnessed several of the blasting explosions, and added he is "comfortable with their procedure."

Although Water Commissioner Peter Pratt felt it would be a wise practice for the contractor to notify nearby residents of impending blasting, SEA engineer Aufiero said personally notifying each resident of every blast would unnecessarily interefere with the contrac-

Selectmen study trash disposal alternatives

By Dave Warren

Selectmen want more details on the cost of sending the town's rubbish to a trash-to-energy plant in Rochester before deciding what they'll do when the Cedar Street landfill reaches its capacity.

The disposal area study committee told selectmen last Wednesday that the town's landfill will be filled in five to nine years. The committee recommended participation in the resource recovery program, known as SEMASS, but told the board they would have to act quickly, as special rates will be gone soon.

Committee Chairman Donald DiMichele said SEMASS participation would cost Cohasset approximately $112,000 a year, compared to the $93,000 cost of running the landfill.

Under the SEMASS program, trash would be brought to the Cedar Street site, where it would be compacted and stored on loaders. Trucks would then transport the loaders to the Rochester plant, where the trash would be shredded and processed into electrical energy, which Mass. Electric has contracted to buy.

If the town acts now, DiMichele said, it can sign up to pay a flat fee of $12 per ton of trash. Under the contract, the rate could not be raised for 27 years, he said.

But this rate is only being offered for the first 400 tons of trash from state communities. "Right now, only around 120 to 180 tons are left. We have to act quickly," DiMichele said.

He added that Quincy and Braintree are now considering signing up for the program, and their trash would leave little opportunity for joining at the lowest rate. "If Quincy joins, it's going to fill up real quickly," he said.

SEMASS has already signed contracts with Canton, Plymouth and Hanson. SEMASS construction is expected to take two years, and will take two years to build.

Expanding the present landfill or joining with Scituate and Hingham to form a regional landfill were ruled out by the committee as being too expensive. Hiring commercial haulers to take Cohasset's trash to another landfill could be considered as a short-term solution, but would prove costly in the long-run, they said.

Aside from the cost of joining, another benefit of SEMASS is that participating communities will be given rebates for the electricity generated by the Rochester plant.

DiMichele said rebates could possibly eliminate any cost to the town for the program by 1992. "After that, we could possibly start making money," he said.

The Cedar Street landfill would probably remain open to accept items not accepted by SEMASS, such as drywall and stone, and for emergency situations should the SEMASS plant shut down. With the reduced inflow of trash, DiMichele guessed the life expectancy for the landfill could be extended by as much as 20 years.

"I encourage you to look into the situation some more," Selectman John DeBassio told the committee. He said if more definite figures are generated soon, public hearings could be scheduled and the issue could be brought to town meeting this fall.

Board members were particularly concerned about the workings and cost of the transfer station at the landfill. DiMichele said three compacters and three storage bins would be needed at the landfill, at a total cost of $45,000, with one full-time person to operate the compactors.

Board members said for safety reasons it would be better to have two persons running the site.

The study committee hopes to have more exact figures for the board this month, and will give another presentation for other town boards. A SEMASS representative will be asked to attend that hearing.

around town

☐ Drew and Jean (Stoughton) Quigley called from Texas last week with exciting news! They recently became parents for a second time, they had another little girl (actually not so little, she tipped the scales at 9 lbs 11 ozs). At press time the name was still being discussed, though it must be known by now. Either set of grandparents will be more than happy to tell you, just ask Mr. and Mrs. Ira Stoughton, Jr., or Major or Mrs. Quigley!

Drew has been celebrating for two reasons . . . he was also made president of the Texas Commerce Bank of Dallas, a real honor indeed. The fact that he is only 31 makes everyone really aware of his business prowess . . . another CHS Grad!

Mark J. Brown

☐ Mark J. Brown, the son of James and Irene Brown of 35 Norfolk Road, Cohasset, recently graduated from The Williston Northampton School, an independent, coeducational college preparatory school in Easthampton, Massachusetts. Mr. Brown will be attending the University of Maine at Orono in the fall.

☐ While on the subject of double celebrations, Gerard and Katherine Stanton had just that last weekend. In case you were wondering what the occasion was at the Lothrop House last Sunday, it was the Stanton clan gathering with their friends to celebrate the baptism of their grandson and their 40th anniversary. Their anniversary took place a while back, as was reported in this column, but they were in Bermuda to celebrate it. Thus the double reason for what looked like a grand party, and everyone had a super time.

☐ This week marks your last chance to buy tickets to Johnny Mathis to support the Second Congregational Church and their efforts to build an elevator in the church. The show will be on Monday, July 9 and the tickets are $25 each. The shows are sold out for the week, his performance is always an excellent one, and the cause is worthy. Three good reasons to call either Clark Chatterton or Richard Silvia (383-0560 and 383-0500 respectively) as soon as possible for more information. Don't miss it.

☐ Congratulations go to three gals who are members of the Cohasset soccer team who have been chosen to participate on the Scholastic Soccer Team for the Southeast Region. The girls are Amy Duncombe, Jill Nedrow and Sarah Seavey, all members of the class of 1985. John Reidy of our team made the final roster of the boys' Scholastic Soccer Team. The Southeast soccer teams will compete with regional teams from across the state. The Bay State Games Finals will take place July 12-15 at locations throughout greater Boston, watch for the listings!

☐ Two Cohasset establishments made Boston Magazine this month, under the topic of good food and good places to eat. The Red Lion Inn made the billing with its outstanding meats and cream puffs being mentioned, as well as the fact that it is a nice stopping off place for the "ravers". Hugo's was mentioned as the place for Sunday Brunch, with the spectacular view and the notorious Bloody Marys as well as the good food and big choices. Sandy Beach was even mentioned as the beach to take a stroll on.

Six piglets in the tub. Actually it was students from CCC nursery school having a great time getting dirty.

☐ Ann Leonard has made the news again, as will be reported following something that should be quoted verbatim . . . "Mom has been such an inspiration to us that we wanted to share her accomplishments with all". What a neat way to be applauded, that's what Ann's daughter Patti Litz did! The reason for everyone's pride is the showing that Ann had in the recent Quincy Olympics that were held on June 16 and 17 at the Veteran Memorial Stadium sponsored by the city and the Beechwood Community Life Center. Out of the eleven events that she competed in, Ann walked away with nine medals: Four gold, four silver and 1 bronze! Incredible when you consider a few other factors: July 25 Ann Leonard celebrated her 70th birthday, and her way of staying in shape should be an example to us all . . . she exercises and walks every week with Nina Constantinides' Exercise Class. Ann's daughters and grandchildren were right there to cheer her on.

☐ That's the news that has been given to me this week . . . give me a call or drop me a line with your news item, everyone likes to see their name in print!

and leaned toward the remodeling of the existing structure.

Board member Mary Jane McArthur said "I think we can develop a first-class modern facility within the confines of these walls."

Fellow Selectman Frank England agreed, noting the number of fine restorations of buildings in town. "And the current location is just where we want it," he added.

Committee chairman Blake said selectmen would have to decide what they want to do with the spacious room. Blake did say that local theater groups would be angry if the auditorium is lost, because the high school stage is not designed for play productions.

Selectmen discussed the possibility of converting just the rear portion of the room into offices, leaving 60 percent of the area near the stage open, but chose to

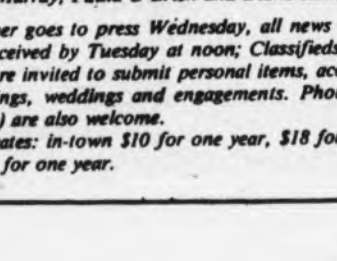
Editorial

A grand tradition



The Fourth of July, to some extent, has become one of those national holidays which has lost its original meaning, like Labor Day and Patriots Day and, to a lesser degree, Memorial Day. It has become simply another day off from work. This July 4, to some folks' indignation, lands on a Wednesday, right in the middle of the week. When the holiday falls on a Monday or Friday it becomes another three-day weekend. On a Tuesday or Thursday, it's easy to stretch the Fourth into a four-day vacation. But a Wednesday? Does one celebrate from Saturday to Wednesday, or Wednesday to Sunday? What does that do to the Fourth of July weekend?

The glorious traditions of the holiday have faded somewhat, but the Fourth, despite its corniness, despite a certain unfashionableness of patriotism these days, continues to tug at our hearts as a sort of national celebration of American life.

There are still, in some towns, bonfires, fireworks, parades, picnics and road races. The backyard barbecue remains a national July 4 tradition. Firecrackers still sound off in neighborhoods, illegal or not, each evening beginning sometime in June. Flags still fly from windows, and somehow we still hold on to a gleaming pride in the holiday and the ideals for which it stands.

This Fourth of July comes in the midst of unprecedented national turmoil, at a time when national patriotism is measured in nuclear capacity and blanketed by political rhetoric. Relations between the United States and the Soviet Union are rapidly deteriorating to the point where we are exchanging threats and barbs across a hostile wall of animosity, and the arms race has escalated to the point where we are beyond the capacity of self-annihilation. Twenty years of progress towards independence and equality for blacks, women and other minorities has been set back by a single vote on affirmative action by the Supreme Court. One part of America bathes in the prosperity of economic recovery, while another, silent segment goes hungry and homeless. It is sometimes a difficult time to be proud of America.

Yet the Fourth of July remains a day of national pride and celebration. We need to remember our heritage and the principles on which this country was based, and there is no better time for that than on the country's birthday. It may be 208 years old, but it has not lost its appeal to each of us. We are still the country with the greatest resources, freest thinkers and widest opportunities in the world. And we still need a bang-up, festive Fourth of July to celebrate that fact.

Cohasset preserved 1909 genealogies

The old families of Cohasset and its parent town of Hingham have been brought back to life through New England History Press' reprinting of the scarce Davenports' 'Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset, Massachusetts.'

Originally published in 1909, this 720-page book is the outcome of twelve years of research done by Elizabeth Osgood Davenport and George Lyman Davenport. Under the auspices of a town historical committee, this husband and wife team searched through the town records, family deeds and wills, cemetery inscriptions, diaries and all manner of printed and unprinted records to prepare this comprehensive genealogical work.

Families, such as the Bournes, Silvias, Lothrops and Orcutts are traced to their origins as far away as England and Portugal. Many of the families have ties all up and down the South Shore and Cape Cod, particularly in the nearby towns of Hingham and Scituate as it was these sons and daughters who settled 'Conahasset' in the late 1600's.

Originally, the Davenports' 'Genealogies' was to be the immediate sequel to Rev. E.V. Bigelow's 1896 'Narrative History of Cohasset.' However, the project of collecting and documenting the large and numerous families of the town took much longer than expected. As the years went by , however, the town decided to use this opportunity to include an addendum of twelve short chapters to supplement the earlier Bigelow text. So, in addition to family genealogies, the book contains essays on the deep-sea captains of the town, the shipwrecks that have occurred on its shores, the musical associations as well as records of the library proprietors of old stock and list of early town officers.

In 'Genealogies', information is given beyond the basic birth dates, marriage status and list of children. The home addresses within the town, occupational titles (whether 'Mariner' or 'Doctor'), deeded lands, armed service records and even locations of cemetery gravestones are often included with the standard genealogical information.

Even after family members left this sea-faring town, moving out with the Gold Rush of 1849 and other westward expansion, the Davenports have indicated these individuals' new homes, whether in California, Idaho, Texas or other parts of America. Prominent on this list of people bearing old Cohasset family names is one Abraham Lincoln, later to become the 16th president of the United States.

Cohasset native and Town Archivist appointed in 1979, David H. Wadsworth gives a carefully researched 2,000 word interpretive essay. In the foreword, he discusses Cohasset-Hingham ties and the role of the Osgood and Tower family in bringing the Davenports' 'Genealogies' to fruition in the early 1900's.

Wadsworth, senior curator of the Cohasset Historical Society, has inbred knowledge of Cohasset and Hingham history and genealogy as well; he traces his maternal ancestry directly to Thomas Nichols and John Tower of Hingham and his paternal ancestry to Christopher Wadsworth of Duxbury-all in the 1630's.

"This new reprinting of the 'Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset, Massachusetts,'" writes Wadsworth, "fills a long recognized need to make available once again the genealogical record of those families and individuals who populated Cohasset during its formative years. It will prove to be of great value to genealogical researchers and to general historians alike.'

Another collaborator on this project has been the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. A valuable, original copy of the Davenports' 'Genealogies' was offered from their collection to New England History Press, allowing the press to make a clear reproduction of the scarce book in its entirety. Despite the three printings of Bigelow's 'Narrative History of Cohasset', most recently in 1981 by the Cohasset Historical Society, Davenports' 'Genealogies' has never before been reprinted.

New England History Press, a publisher specializing in local New England histories and genealogies, published George Lincoln's genealogies of Hingham families. Originally volume II and III of the three-volume 'History of the Town of Hingham,' Lincoln's work was reprinted in 1982 as one 915 page volume of valuable genealogical information.

The new printing of the Davenport book includes, in addition to the new foreword, three useful maps dating back to the seventeenth and eighteenth century. A facsimile of the Land Division Map, dated 1669-1670, drawn by Lt. Joshua Fisher, depicts the section of Hingham which is today incorporated as the town of Cohasset. This land grant map shows the early streets, buildings and natural landmarks at the turn of the seventeenth century. An 1845 map of Cohasset 'Before the Railroad was Built' has been printed on the dust jacket and endpapers of this new edition. The third map measures 17"x 22"and is reproduced from the 1894 Geodetic Survey with supplementary surveys done in 1898. It locates streets, schools, churches, swamps, beaches, and other man-made and natural characteristics of the town at the turn of the century.

These maps, made available to the press through the courtesy of David Wadsworth, plus the original 50 illustrations and photographs of town officers, the town common, prominent individuals and large ships of the day offer pictorial documentation of early Cohasset.

Copies of the Davenports' 'Genealogies of the Families of Cohasset' or descriptive folders are available by contacting the publisher, New England History Press, PO Box 70, Somersworth NH, 03878.

look into the cost for renovating the high school auditorium and restrict town hall to municipal business.

"If they have to invest money to renovate (the high school auditorium), and they get the blessing of the school committee, then I think that should be their option. I don't think we can co-exist in here," DeBassio said.

Laugelle responded that the town hall auditorium has been home for everyone, including the theater groups, for many years.

"It's been home for everyone except the people who work here--they deserve a little consideration, too," DeBassio countered. "The working environment upstairs for town workers is absolutely inferior . . . and inappropriate for conducting town business," he added.

After considering holding off on a vote until a hearing could be held, the board opted to voice its opinion and let residents respond at a later date.

"Let them justify why we should keep it as a theater," DeBassio said.

No date was set for a hearing, but selectmen suggested someone look into the cost of renovating the high school auditorium before a hearing is held.

Common history

Cohasset's Town Common frequently is often called the finest example of an old New England village green to be found in this area. Its history goes back to late 1600's, long before Cohasset became a town or even was a lived-in part of Hingham.

When Hingham was settled during the 1630's, its vacant eastern section, called Conahasset, was visited by farmers travelling to the shores to harvest salt hay. By 1670 Hingham 'Proprietors' or landowners decided to divide the upland areas of Conahasset and parcel it out to each property owner of the town.

Lieutenant Joshua Fisher of Dedham was hired to survey the land and mark out each man's share. The founding of Cohasset as an outlying village of Hingham dates from that Land Division. In the map drawn by Joshua Fisher each Hingham Proprietor received a share of the previously undivided common land of Conahasset, and soon the first farms and homesteads were built in the newly opened upland areas.

Fisher's map left undivided the salt marshes along the shores. It also left under common ownership a large tract of uplands extending from Little Harbor on the north to Cohasset Harbor on the south. This area, labelled on Fishers map simply as 'Plain' is today's Cohasset Common. Through many years, new arrivals in Cohasset encroached and built dwellings upon the fringes of the remaining Common Land, especially its southern and eastern parts along today's Elm Street, and in the early 1800's the town conveyed the encroached land to its occupants but halted further encroachment.

Thus the boundaries of Cohasset's Common were defined and remain essentially the same today.

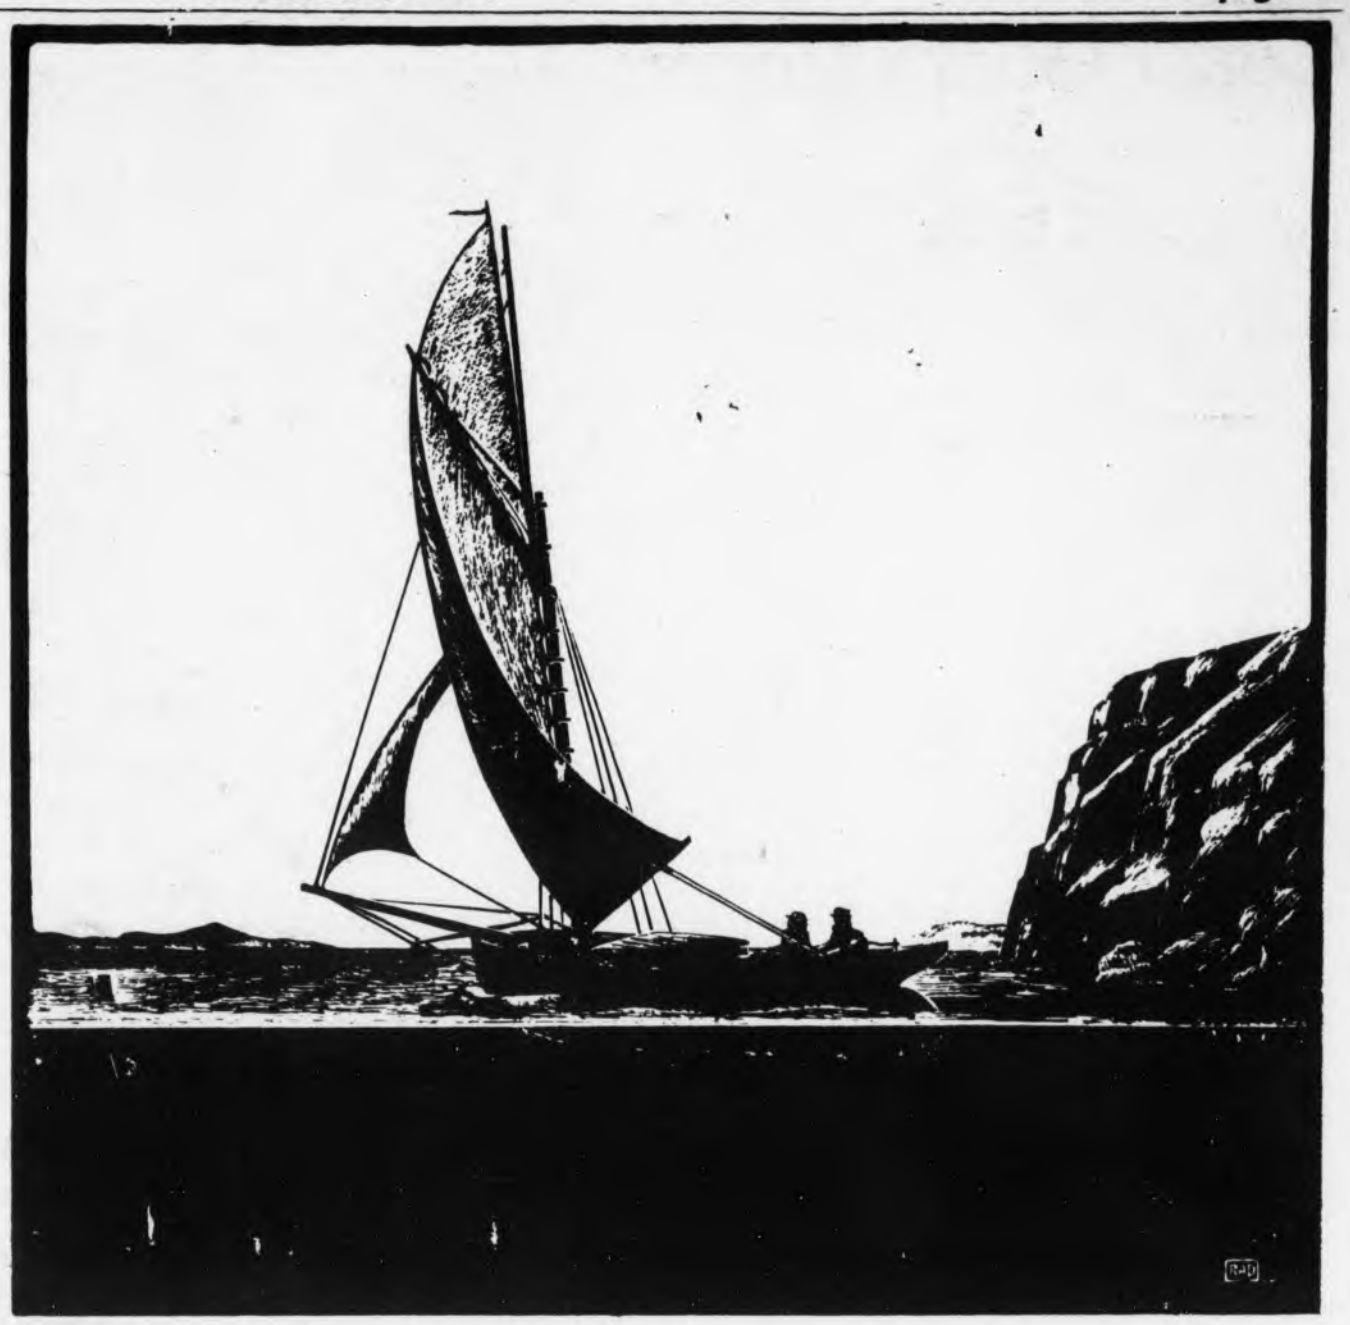
During the 1920's, an organization of homeowners called the Cohasset Improvement Association purchased part of the previously encroached land at the lower end of the Common, razed a group of stores located there, and presented the area to the town to make it once again part of the Common. In about 1714, residents of the Cohasset area constructed their first Meeting House on their Common, just a few yards south of the present First Parish Meeting House.

That building was taken down after the present church was built in 1747. Cohasset became the 2nd or East Precinct of Hingham in 1717 and its Meeting House became Hingham's 2nd Parish at the same time. The Common's western and southern boundary was marked by today's North Main Street, an ancient way leading from the original Hingham settlement to the village at Scituate.

By the year 1700 several farms and dwellings existed along the highway, and soon Main Street became lined with residences, particularly surrounding the Common area. By the time Cohasset became a town separate from its parent Hingham in 1770, the Common land was the center of activities for the new community. Local militia often drilled at the Common, and recently an old cannon ball was unearthed by residents in a nearby yard.

Today's Common is flanked by residences of diverse architectural styles ranging from early Georgian or Federal or Colonial days to ornate Italianate Victorian and Classical revival, all representing the several major architectural eras through which our nation passed. The Town Hall was constructed in the 1850's, the 2nd Congregational Church in the 1820's, and nearby atop Bourne's Rocks, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church dates from the 1890's.

The Common Pond, in early days called the 'frog pond', is a natural feature, having been a small glacial punchbowl. During parts of the 19th century the Common was fenced in to keep out wandering animals, but ducks and geese seem to have inhabited the frog pond since earliest days, as the ducks still see fit to do.



A feature of the 19th century common was an ornate bandstand, located across the street from the Town Hall. At the north end of the Common the town's flagpole was presented to the townspeople in the early 1900's by the family of George G. Crocker, and nearby is found the Daughters of the American Revolution's memorial boulder and plaque dedicated to Cohasset's Revolutionary War soldiers and sailors.

Among the stately residences lining the Common are the homes of Cohasset's Sea Captains, notably those of the Hall family, of Capt. James Collier Jr. and Capt. Joseph Smith. Today's Unitarian Parish House dates from 1722 and was built by the Rev. Nehemiah Hobart, the first Minister of the new Parish in Cohasset.

His grandfather, the Rev. Peter Hobart, had settled in Hingham in the 1630's to become the first pastor of the original Hingham church now called the 'Old Ship'. Among buildings once lining the Common but now gone are the early 19th century private school called Cohasset Academy, moved to Beach Street to make way for the construction of the Town Hall, Pratt's store, located across the Common on North Main Street and still existing within the memory of many residents, Frank Browne's large Victorian home located next to the Town Hall and demolished in the 1920's to make room for a proposed but never constructed brick Town Hall, and an early house of Richard Tower, moved in the mid 1800's to Elm Street where it today forms part of a larger Cape Cod cottage.

Several houses along the Common have come from elsewhere; one had been called the 'Arcade Hall' when located on Smith Place in the mid-1800's. For a brief time in about 1900 the north end of the Common was considered as a possible site for the town's Public Library building, before the present South Main Street site was chosen. Cohasset's historic Town Common has played a major role in the town's development from the very beginning and continues to do so today.

The packet boat

Richard Dabrowski

The 'Cohasset', built circa 1810, was Cohasset's first packet boat. She carried cargo, and sometimes passengers, to Boston and return. Her wharf, according to Gilbert S. Tower's Historical Map (1946) was in the Cove, located on the Margin Street side of what is now the motel.

By about 1850, the year after the railroad came, she, and one or two other local boats, were out of business.

Selectmen hope to form transportation council

By Mike Berger

Scituate selectmen will be writing to area selectmen to request the formation of a regional transportation council.

This request comes in the wake of a private consultant report written for the state Legislature concerning restoring commuter rail service to the South Shore and particularly Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

Scituate selectman Rich Bowen who drafted a lengthy report proposing a railbus for the South Shore made the proposal for a regional council at a recent selectmen's meeting.

Bowen, who said his first intention is to form a committee in Scituate, said it is important for residents within the towns to tell community leaders what they want for improvements to regional transportation.

"And then it's important to give a local viewpoint to those up on Beacon Hill," Bowen said.

Cambridge Systematics Inc. was hired by the MBTA and the Legislature to prepare a report on what it would take to bring back commuter service from the South Shore to Boston.

The report essentially said restoring three major branches (Plymouth, Middleboro and Nantasket-Greenbush) would cost $200 million "and that's a conservative figure," said State Rep. Frank Hynes of Marshfield.

The report presents four levels of commuter rail service including a 60 mile per hour "top shelf" train from Boston to stations in Weymouth, East Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, North Scituate, Scituate and Greenbush.

The trainride would take 52 minutes from Scituate into South Station in Boston. It is estimated this branch would have 7,000 to 9,000 riders and 2700 to 3100 riders just from the Greenbush section (Marshfield, Scituate, Cohasset) commuters.

This top shelf service would probably cost $31 million to operate although $6.13 million is estimated as an annual passenger revenue.

The fourth level of service would make limited stops to the Hingham-Scituate area and would travel at 30 miles per hour. The operating cost is not yet estimated.

Hynes who is the co-chairman of the South Shore Legislative Caucus, said he is happy to see an indepth report produced because for the first time it lays out the obstacles facing the area if commuter rail is restored.

The immediate obstacles are what Hynes calls environmental and institutional. Hynes said to acquire the rail right of ways would need approval from each town's Conservation Commission. In Scituate's case, Bowen said the commission does not control these right-of ways.

The railroad beds are now the scenes of much residential buildup and another factor is how commuter rail would affect the operation of the public bus companies like Plymouth and Brockton which are licensed by the MBTA.

Hynes said the next step is for Cambridge Systematics to "fine tune" the report. In addition the report will be circulated to area towns for resident and town government input.

Hynes said it is too early to get an indication of whether the governor or House or Senate leadership will financially support the demands of rail service.

However, two positive notes are: Gov. Michael Dukakis and legislative leaders pushed for the rail report when it was requested in December and state government leaders are pleased with the recreational train from Braintree to the Cape.

Hynes warned this train trip should not be considered as a trial run or pathfinder for commuter rail to the South Shore because the train is considered a recreational day-trip transportation vehicle.

Cohasset summer sports scene

'Freshman Girl's Basketball'
By Lisa Shumaker

The girls opened their summer season last Wednesday beating Marshfield, 32 to 13. Cohasset played very well as a team. The high scorers for Cohasset were Maureen O'Leary with nine points and Maria Cahill with eight points.

The team continued to play well Friday when they crushed Whitman/Hanson 55 to 36. Everyone contributed in this game. The overall high scorers for this game were Maureen O'Leary with sixteen points, Caitlin Staunton with eleven points, and Maria Cahill with 10 points. The key to the game was the tough defense played by Caitlin Staunton and the excellent rebounding by Melissa Shea.

Eighth Grade Boys' Basketball

The boys began their summer season last Monday overpowering Marshfield 52 to 46. Cohasset came out smoking in the first half and practically stopped Marshfield's offense. In the second half Marshfield put on an incredible shooting exhibition, but Cohasset kept their cool and held on to their lead. The high scorers for Cohasset were Michael Smith with 22 points and Chris Waters with 10 points.

On Tuesday the team beat Hull 49 to 20. This victory was the result of an overall team effort along with great rebounding and a strong desire to win. The key to the game was the scrappy, hustling defense by Cohasset. Cohasset's high scorers were David Shultz with 14 points and Michael Smith with 11 points.

The boys also defeated Marshfield Tuesday night 52 to 24. The team showed no fatigue even though they just played a full game the night before. Cohasset demonstrated unselfish team playing. The key to this game was tough rebounding by Michael Smith, Adam Whitman, and David Shumaker. For Cohasset the overall high scorers were David Shultz with thirteen points and Michael Smith with 11 points.

Jr. High Girl's Basketball

The girls were not as fortunate as Cohasset's other basketball teams and opened with a loss to a tough Marshfield team last Monday. Clare Brady, the team's coach, attributed the loss to 'first game jitters.' In this game Debbie Hartley was Cohasset's high scorer with four points.

Wednesday Cohasset lost to Rockland 18 to 27. Much improvement was shown by the girls in this game. Nancy Riley became the team's overall high scorer with six points. Cohasset played good defense, but their shots were just not falling.

Flying Scot Race Series

The Flying Scots were unable to race on Saturday due to the heavy fog. The race will be made up Sunday, July 8.

Cohasset Golf Club

Last Saturday the Cohasset Golf Club held a four person best two balls tournament. The team consisting of Ralph Ellis, Doug Bailey, George Benedict, and Ed Lincoln won the tournament with a score of 113.

Area civic softball league

In the Area Civic Softball League action Sunday, it was a battle between the divisions and within the divisions.

In the contest between the divisions, Division Two triumphed over Division One in both double-headers. Division Two's second place Building 19 defeated Division One's second place L Street Pub, 15-9 and 10-5.

Division Two's first place Strawberry Parfait came up the winners over Division One's first place Hugo's, 10-9, 8-7, giving them the best record in the league.

The match-up between Division One's Ocean Kai and Division One's Weymouth Police resulted in an offensive bout with Ocean Kai on top 18-10. Over the Hill Gang picked up a tough loss as Clipper Ship defeated the Gang 8-7.

Finally, in the Division Two race, Marshfield Sunoco shut out Anderson Insulation to remain 1½ games within first place.

Good School July 10.

from the kitchen

by Joan Pinkham

Loading up at the supermarket for tomorrow's holiday cookout may seem like quite a chore when even finding an empty shopping cart becomes a challenge as summer visitors swell the check-out lines and a crowded parking lot exiles us to a far-away corner. But, like so many things, it's all relative when you realize our little Independence Day shopping expedition is really quite paltry compared to that of Abigail Adams, wife of President John Adams. Her grocery order one summer included a barrel of brown sugar and one hundred bushels of oats. Getting in supplies for their Independence Day dinner meant driving a rickety wagon over bad roads to Quincy and so their servants loaded up with all the food they could carry to stave off for as long as possible the evil day when they would have to sally forth again. Housewives of that era were creating dishes which they named Independence Cake, Federal Cake, Election Cake, Ratification Cake and Congressional Bean Soup—the ancestor of the bean soup which is a traditional item on the menu of the Senate dining room to this day. Thanks to Priscilla Hall, I have Sarah Bertha Hall's dog-eared copy of the cookbook published in 1901 of "150 Tested Recipes Compiled by the Ladies of Marshfield Hills, Mass." and it includes the late Hattie Bartlett's recipe for

BAKED BEAN SOUP

One cup baked beans, one cup stewed or canned tomato, one onion, three cups cold water, two stalks of celery, if you like. Simmer these slowly 30 min. Rub through a sieve, season to taste with salt and pepper and thicken with one tablespoon melted butter and two tablespoons of flour, rubbed and cooked together.

In 1774 when the Congressional Congress was meeting in Philadelphia, John Adams wrote home that he had been entertained by Chief Justice Chew and was offered "Turtle and every other thing—Flummery, jellies, sweetmeats of 20 sorts, Trifles, whip'd syllabubbs, floating islands and . . ." Their favorite "tipple" was Madeira wine and they made their own rum, beer and cider; even their own cough medicine like this:

Thoroughwort, hoarhound, flaxseed, licorice (stick), slippery elm, one ounce each; simmer all together in one quart of water until the strength is extracted, then strain carefully, add one pint molasses and a half a pound of sugar, simmer to a thick syrup and add the juice of two lemons. Bottle tight. Take a tablespoon as often as required.

"Tested Recipes"

Down through the years, salmon and fresh peas have become as traditional as turkey at Thanksgiving and the Easter ham, but on a hot, sunny July Fourth, not too many of us want to spend the holiday alone in the kitchen. Fanny Farmer's cookbook was first published in 1896 and has been revised many times down through the years. For many of us, it's a favorite and here is one way to serve traditional salmon:

MOLDED SALMON, CUCUMBER SAUCE

Mix:
2 tsp. salt
2 T sugar
2 tsp. flour
1 tsp. mustard
Few grains cayenne
2 egg yolks
2 T melted butter
1 c. milk
1/4 c. mild vinegar

Cook until thick over hot water (or in a heavy pan over low heat), stirring constantly. Put in a small saucepan 1/2 c. water and sprinkle over it 1 envelope gelatine. Stir over low heat until gelatine dissolves. Stir into the sauce and add 2 c. cooked or canned salmon, mold and serve with

CUCUMBER SAUCE

Pare cucumbers. Grate or chop thoroughly. Season to taste with salt, pepper and vinegar. Salad serves six.

"A Good Cook takes pleasure in trying new recipes. She prides herself on the successful products of her skill" and with that little pat on the back, George F. Welch of Scituate goes on to list his kitchen products he offers for sale in his ad in the 1901 cookbook of "Tested Recipes." Other advertisers were J.A. Rice & Co. of Rockland offering corsets and underwear . . . E.W. Hall & Son of Marshfield Hills with boots and shoes, hay and grain for sale and W.W. Wade of Egypt, Mass. selling new and secondhand pianos, organs and old square pianos, secondhand instruments and tuning was his specialty. F.N. Damon of Marshfield Hills was a carriage builder and trimmer, while James Sidaway of Hanover offered artistic paper hangings at "way down prices." Charles T. Holmes of Plymouth was the agent for Aermotor Co. that made windmills and Edgar W. Hood was very versatile for his ad said he was a jeweler and agent for "The Adamant Shoe." He lived opposite the schoolhouse in Marshfield Hills.

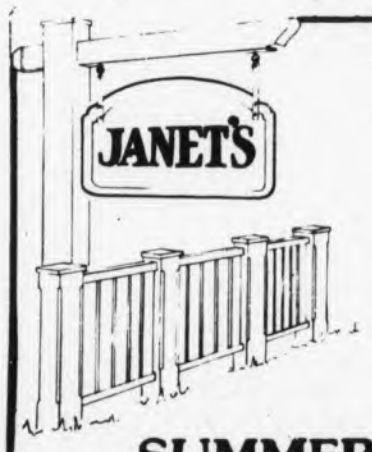
Crampton to challenge Studds

The race for Massachusetts' tenth congressional district seat has broadened with Lew Crampton announcing his challenge against incumbent Gerry Studds. The 45-year-old Republican who was raised in Duxbury and Cohasset has been on the campaign trail since the end of March when he left his job as a top-level administrator at the Environmental Protection Agency in Washington.

In the announcement Crampton noted that his goals of protecting New England's shoreline, preserving the environment, providing better educations for children and more meaningful jobs, reducing the national debt and lessening the threat of nuclear war are shared by most Americans. Crampton said separating himself from Studds is how to go about achieving these objectives.

Crampton said, 'The new realities of the 1980s mean that we must find new approaches to deal with the problems of post-industrial society. We clearly must look beyond the politics of yesterday to deal with the challenge of tomorrow. The days of 'government-knows-best' and 'big-government-knows-best-of-all' are over.'

Crampton began his career as a consultant on political affairs in the People's Republic of China at the Rand corporation. He then returned to Massachusetts to work in the Boston Model Cities Program and went on to become Commissioner of Massachusetts' Department of Community Affairs. He later worked as a special adviser to the state legislature to modernize the State Environment Policy Act and to develop a new personnel system for legislative staff.



Later, Crampton worked as a research manager for Housing and Urban Development at Abt Associates and as Senior Consultant at the Arthur D. Little Company. He has most recently served at the Director of the Office of Management Systems and Evaluation at the EPA in Washington where he received several awards for his work forging state and federal cooperation in protecting the environment .

Lew Crampton

Crampton received his BA with honors from Princeton University's Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs, an MA from Harvard University in East Asian Studies, and has done work in the doctoral program for Urban and Regional Planning at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Crampton and his wife, Kathleen, have three children, Perrine, Christopher and Kate.

Let's hear it for a woman vice president

By Lois Martin

"Ahem, Walter, how 'bout me over here in the Northeast?

"I understand you're on a national search for a vice president, a real woman for your ticket. You haven't much time before the convention so I thought I'd toss my hat, bonnet really, toward you for review. Please make no commitments with Gary or another woman before checking my credentials . . ."

How does that sound for a pleasant letter to Mr. Mondale? There is nothing politic you know, in ignoring opportunity.

PATCHES

Just last week I was mesmerized by the frozen embryo story. The birds and the bees were easier to understand than the test tube commitments. But I had brief moments when I wondered about the possibility of fame through surrogate motherhood.

In the case of those three frozen embryos, I thought perhaps the decision-makers might favor someone with experience and maturity. This calls, I thought, for an unusual woman.

But on reflection, I chose to ignore that opportunity for fame because my house has too many stairs in it for a woman responsible for three little lives. Beyond that I don't have a lot of time these days to keep my legs up to reduce swelling.

My ultimate decision was to send in the name of a friend who has experience in multiple births. Someday she'll thank me.

And fortunately, in the wake of the opportunity to give birth came the chance to be vice president. What possible justification could there be not to make a move on it.

It isn't that I'm without qualifications. I've always liked Minnesota and the balance that a woman from this state would provide on the ticket is clear. There's been chatter about his asking Mike Dukakis. But that move would fall short of affirming equality for women.

I have been to Washington, D.C. And while I haven't been to the Blair House, surely Walt would agree it's high time to get a Maine-born woman back in the house named for a Maine man.

I am a ready patriot. I have command of all the words to the "Star Spangled Banner." I don't sing well, but nothing will stop my giving voice in support of my country.

Like George Bush, my name is easy and I can handle it if people forget my name and my existence as vice president. Not everyone can say that. Some in our history have sought to advance themselves to the presidency. I can't promise that I would refuse that office when you've ticked everyone off in four years. But I'd be surprised if I were willing to tackle the housekeeping responsibilities inherent in the White House now that I can fudge along with fewer bathrooms to take care of it.

As for my aplomb as an international representative of this government, I heard no complaints or invectives (that I could interpret as such) in my brief forays to foreign lands.

If George did Russia, so can I. If Nixon as 'vice' (forgive me) handled that walk along the China wall years ago, I can, too.

I vote a lot. The fact that it has sometimes been for a party other than yours ought to be irrelevant not irreverent. He might find himself on a more secure platform with an Independent woman than a Democratic one. Think about that, Walter. Ask Joan.

I have seldom viewed knowledge as a necessary precursor for speech. Thereby I'd be but an elbow's nudge away from willingness to voice an opinion on any subject. Walter's going to need that spontaneous if erroneous immediacy on his ticket because he hasn't outquipped enough opponents to discount the value of someone who's fast on her speech.

The only thing that would give me pause about pursuing Walter's support for his vice presidential partner would be if I were persuaded he didn't mean it . . . about finding a woman. If I thought for a moment that he was just saying that to arouse our interest and gain attention by asking for ours, I'd be peeved.

I would reconsider viewing this as an opportunity for me or for some other woman. In fact, I'd be inclined to submit for his consideration the same name as I suggested for the embryos. Because some might say he was offering a surrogate vice presidency . . . some woman gets to carry his plan along, help develop it, only to have it whipped away for the man he'll name at the convention as the real vice president.

The following is a notice from the state Division of Marine Fisheries on Amended Striped Bass Regulations:

On May 31, the Marine Fisheries Advisory Commission approved a Division of Marine Fisheries proposal designed to effect a 50 percent reduction in exploitation rates of striped bass in Massachusetts waters. The 50 percent reduction goal was developed cooperatively by the coastal states from Maine through North Carolina as a means of promoting rebuilding of Chesapeake Bay striped bass stocks. It was further agreed that more restrictive measures should be implemented in 1984 and remain in place until stock recovery is evidenced by a three-year running average of 8.0 in the Maryland Juvenile Index.

Amended striped bass regulations that will implement the Massachusetts proposal are summarized as follows:

1.) Recreational Fishermen

a) permit requirements - none

b) seasonal restrictions - none

c) daily catch limit - one fish

d) possession limit - one fish

e) minimum size limit - 24 inches fork length

f) disposition of catch - for home consumption only; may not be sold.

g) processing limitations - no mutilation permitted; fish must be transported to place of domicile with head, body and tail intact.

2.) Commercial Fishermen

a) permit requirements - Special Striped Bass Fishery Permit issued by DMF of a cost of $10.00. In addition, fishermen who sell in excess of 100 lbs. plus one fish per day will continue to need a Commercial Fisherman Permit.

b) seasonal restrictions - closed season October 1 through May 31.

c) daily catch limit - none in season

d) possession limit - none in season

e) minimum size limit - 24 inches fork length

f) disposition of catch - may be sold from June 1 through September 30 only.

g) processing limitations - no mutilation permitted; fish must be sold with head, tail and body intact.

3.) Dealers

a) permit requirements - Wholesale or Retail Dealer Permit.

b) seasonal restrictions - may buy bass from June 1 through September 30 only.

c) minimum size limit - 24 inches fork length

d) possession limit - none in season

e) prohibitions - possession of striped bass by Wholesale and Retail Dealers prohibited from October 5 through May 31 unless otherwise authorized in writing by the Director.

f) processing limitations - fish must be purchased in the "round."

Commercial fishermen may obtain a Special Striped Bass Fishery Permit application by contacting this office. Permits will be issued at a cost of $10.00 and will be accompanied by a catch report that must be completed and returned to this office by the date specified.

New regulations are effective immediately. Commercial fishermen must obtain Special Striped Bass Fishery Permits by July 1, 1984.

Any questions regarding this matter should be directed to Randy Fairbanks at 727-3194.

Cohasset Historical Society opens museums

The Cohasset Historical Society's two museums at Cohasset Center now are open for the summer season. The Maritime Museum and the Capt. John Wilson Historical House will remain open through the end of September, with hours scheduled each afternoon except Mondays from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Admission by donation is 75¢ per building for adults, 25¢ per building for children from six to 12 years, and Society members free. The Capt. Wilson Historical House is an 1810 dwelling built by David Nichols for the Cohasset sea captain for whom the house is named. Capt. John Wilson of Cohasset was born in August of 1788, in June of 1810 married Hepsibah Kilby.

They had nine children, of whom son Justin Kent Wilson, born in 1822, resided later in the Elm Street house built by his father. In 1912 the descendants of Capt. John Wilson sold the family home to Cohasset businessman William H. McGaw, owner of the hardware store just across the street.

In 1936 McGaw presented the building to the Cohasset Historical Society in memory of his wife. Today it holds a collection of early furniture and home furnishings collected from many of the old houses of the town, and has a Children's Room containing early toys, dolls, children's furniture and artwork done in the 19th century.

In the kitchen of the Wilson House are located examples of early cooking and kitchenware, candle molds, an early Shaker washing machine and a primitive wooden sink. Unlike most old houses the Wilson house has its living quarters on the second floor, since Capt. John Wilson maintained a small store in the dwelling's single first floor room. Here are found antique furniture and Cohasset artwork of the 19th and early 20th centuries.

Adjacent to the Wilson House on Elm Street is the Society's Maritime Museum, formerly Samuel and John Bates' ship chandlery building. Constructed in the latter 1700s on Border Street at Cohasset's harbor, the chandlery was the supply building for the Bates family's fleet of fishing schooners which sailed from Cohasset during the years 1750 to 1880.

Presented to the Historical Society in 1957 by Mr. and Mrs. William C. Cox, the historic old building was moved from its original location on Border Street to the Society's Elm Street property at Cohasset Center. Today the first floor of the Maritime Museum contains exhibits relating to the town's long heritage as a seafaring community.

Included in the unique collections to be seen at the Maritime Museum are numerous relics from Cohasset's 19th century schooner fleets, models of sailing vessels representative of the types sailed by the town's "Deep Sea Captains," items salvaged from some of the numerous shipwrecks which occurred on Cohasset's shores during the "Age of Sail," examples of the work of local shipcarvers who created the figureheads and intricate decorations for Cohasset's fishing schooners, and the story of both first and second lighthouses located at Minot's Ledge, just off Cohasset's shores.

The Maritime Museum's second floor contains a general collection of artifacts, documents, maps and pictures relating to Cohasset's earliest years. Stone tools of the Quonahasset Indians, housewright's and cordwainer's tools, relics from Cohasset's railroads, old school desks and early military equipment form part of the historical exhibits found in the Maritime Museum.

Irish terrier from Ill. wins dog show

An Irish terrier from Richmond, Ill. took top honors at the South Shore Kennel Club's all-breed show last Friday in Hingham.

Ch. Tralee's Rowdy Red, a 2½-year-old male, was handled by Robert Fisher and owned by Edward B. Jenner. He headlined the more than 900 dogs representing the 112 breeds entered in the show.

He was awarded, as best in show, the Marianne Gryzbinksi trophy, a new award from the club in honor of Mrs. Gryzbinski, a former show chairman who was an active member for many years.

This year Herbert Moran of Scituate again served as chairman for the show, which is one of two the club sponsors. They also have a January show, this year to be at the Bayside Exposition Center in Dorchester in conjunction with the Cape Cod Kennel Club.

There were a wide range of winners in group categories in Friday's show. A chow chow won the non-sporting group, while a Weimaraner took the sporting group. A Newfoundland was named the best working dog, while a bearded Collie took top honors in the herding class. In the toy category, an Italian greyhound was named best, while a greyhound took top honors in the hound group.

An obedience show is held within the regular kennel club show each year, sponsored by the South Shore Dog Training Club. This year's show had a very unusual event: an entrant who scored a perfect 200 to be the absolutely perfect dog. This paragon was Quillquest Astarte, CDX, a female flat-coated retriever from Bloomfield, N.J., owned by Gillian Impey and Martha Leonard. Both sire and dam were breed champions.

It was an unusual happening for the judge, as well. Because Mrs. Raymond Alexander of Weston had never before awarded a perfect 200 points to any competitor.

Here is Sue Coons of Norwell at the Hingham Dog Show with "Zoe," a Scottish deerhound.

End-of-the-year events at Derby

Hingham's Derby Academy graduated the 193rd class in its 200-year history June 7.

A daylong program of festivities, very like the earliest year-end exercises, began with simultaneous performances of Tom Sawyer by Lower Schoolers and George M by Upper Schoolers in the morning.

Leading the students were the class marshals, top-ranked ninth graders Joshua Nickerson of Duxbury and Jeffrey Breen of Norwell, flanked by color guards Emily Weymouth and Kathryn Lubrano of Hingham, and color bearers Seana Kelly of Greenbush and Winship Fuller Jr. of Hingham.

Emily Shannon Weymouth won the Madam Derby Pin. Winship Cleveland Fuller Jr. won the Academy Pin. Both awards recognize the students who best typify the Derby spirit.

Thirteen students received book prizes for achievement of an A- or above in each subject throughout the entire year. They are Amar Ulhas Andalkar of South Weymouth; Jeffrey Oliver Breen of Norwell; Curtis Lisante Cetrulo, Erik Jeremy Cetrulo, Anne Chin, Elizabeth MacKenzie Tobey, Anna Morgan Weymouth, and Emily Weymouth, all of Hingham; Daniel Fairfield Cohen of Hull; Lance Stafford Hutchinson and Joshua Bailey Nickerson of Duxbury; Seana Kelly of Greenbush and Joann Marisa Samuels of Marshfield.

The Rev. Kenneth LaFleur of Hingham's Old Ship Church delivered the traditional Derby Lecture, first established by Madam Sarah Derby in 1784. He acknowledged the students' privilege in having been offered a superior education and the good fortune to look ahead to a good future. At the same time, he counseled them against isolating themselves among the minority who have shared their experience, pointing out that the most stimulating, creative people they are to meet in the future may well be among the majority outside the "ivory tower."

Musings

By John H. Cutler

☐Remember, gentlemen, men first up ladders.

☐As I said years ago, there are four stages of intoxication: jocose, lachrymose, bellicose and comatose. Years ago I had an interesting discussion on this topic with Ernest Hooton, the great anthropoligst. He disagreed when I said, "Liquor intensifies your mood. That is, if you're feeling sad, liquor will make you feel sadder and if you are in a happy mood, liquor will make you feel happier."

☐An old chestnut: When Hooton was walking down the street, he spied a black-haired lady pushing a red-haired baby. "May I ask, madam, what is the color of the baby's father's hair?" "I don't know," replied the lady. "He didn't take off his hat."

☐Ronald Reagan may not be the best president the Republicans ever elected, but at any convention he is certainly the best receptionist.

☐A Democracy is a nation in which everyone has an equal right to feel superior to his peers.

☐While it is important to build character, it is usually more important to rebuild.

☐It was a Republican, naturally, who inserted these items in the Congressional Record: Large cities such as New York are filled with Republicans, up until 5 p.m. At this point, there is a phenomenon much like an automatic washer starting the spin cycle. People begin pouring out of every exit of the city. These are Republicans going home.

Contract negotiations costly for Cohasset

The town has already expended $21,305 in collective bargaining with the police and fire department unions, in a prolonged effort to reach a contact settlement.

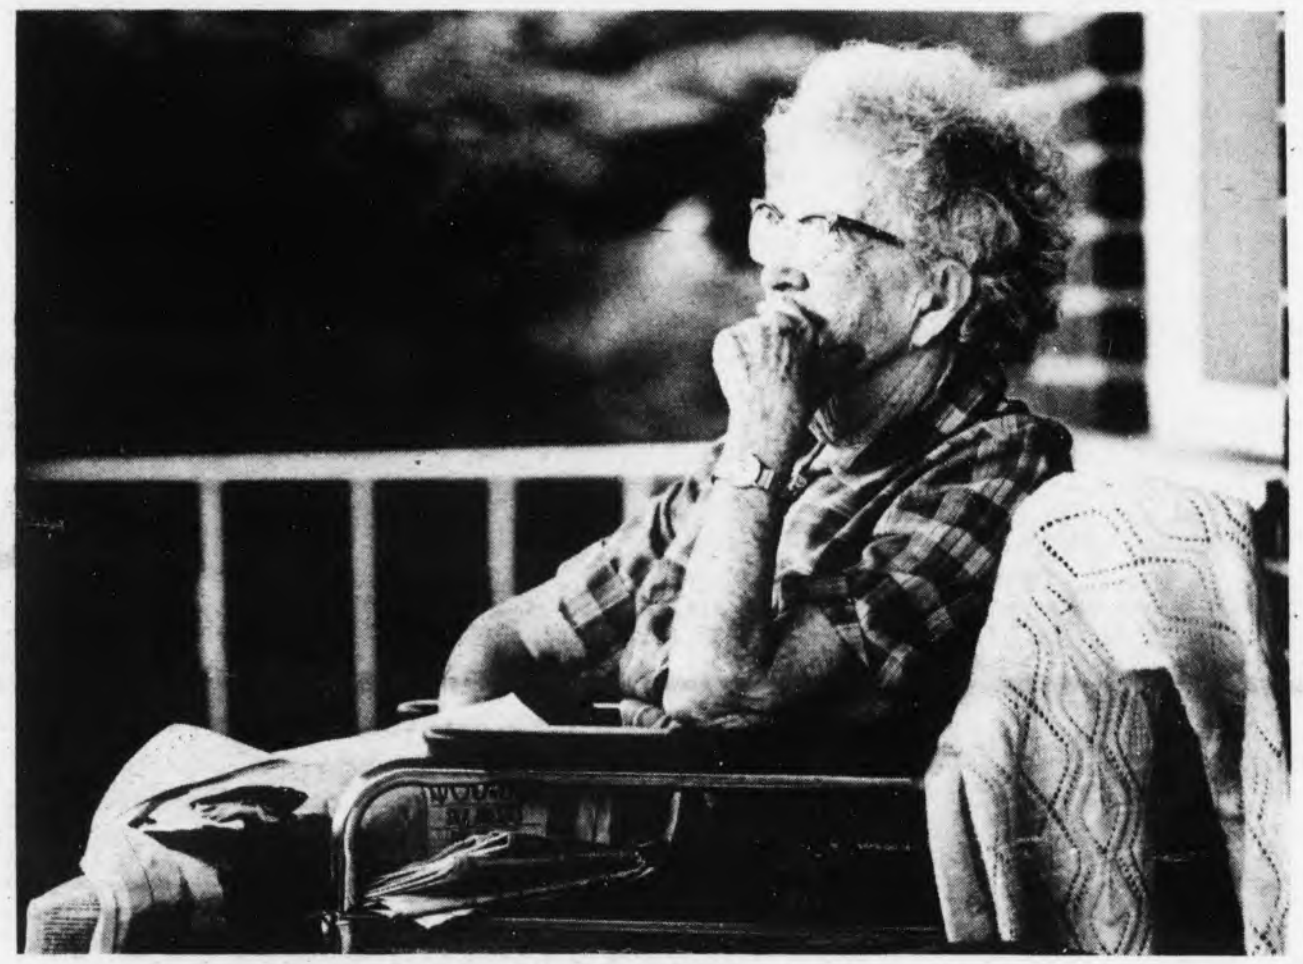
That amount, which is significantly greater than past years, does not include costs for the month of June which have yet to be paid. The sum includes contract negotiations and grievance procedures.

Contract negotiations with both unions, which began last fall, are currently at a stalemate and not close to settlement. Selectmen were scheduled to meet in executive session Wednesday night with the personnel committee and negotiator Phillip Boyle of Holland, Crowe and Drachman of Boston, to discuss collective bargaining strategy. The firm charges the town $75 per hour.

Selectmen Chairman Cliff Mitman, who participated in the previous contract negotiations as a personnel committee member, said there is a "real concern" on the part of selectmen to settle a new contract. The previous two-year contract expired June 30.

In anticipation of contract bargaining, $2000 was appropriated in the past fiscal year. A $6000 transfer was later approved from the reserve fund. And, at the special town meeting in June, $15,541 was appropriated from the reserve fund. According to Town Accountant William Signorelli, there is $2235 left in fiscal 1984's budget to cover the June contract negotiations.

In fiscal year 1983 the town spent $2480 in total collective bargaining expenditures. That total was extended later by a $1000 transfer from the reserve fund.



In FY 1982, $5224 was expended in negotiations for the current two-year contract. Originally $1000 was appropriated, but a $4224 transfer was later approved.

A look back to fiscal year 1981 shows that $3000 was appropriated for collective bargaining and $2871 was spent. And in FY 1980, $4500 was appropriated, with a $1000 transfer approved for a total expenditure of $6171.

Both sides have said a contract for each union is not close to settlement.

The school department, which includes the only other union representatives among municipal employees, settled contracts with relative ease this past year. The three unions comprising the custodians, secretaries and teachers, all received a five and one-half percent pay increase.

Contract negotiations between the three school department unions were settled in two or three sessions this past winter.

A penny for the thoughts of Harriet Tighe as she spends a warm afternoon relaxing on the porch of Cohasset Knoll.

A sailor returns

It is done.

It took 30 and one-half days, one and a half more than he predicted. But Spencer Langford and his beloved 38-foot sailboat crossed the Atlantic. Alone.

And when he arrived in Newport, R.I. last week after completing the Ostar (The Observer Singlehanded TransAtlantic Race), "it was party time " for this 47 year-old father of three who challenged an oc . The insurance professional who captained a family cruising vessel amidst some of the world's best sailors and the most technically advanced boats, had no illusions about winning. "I just wanted to complete the race," he said this week in the comfort of his Cohasset office. "I am very satisfied with myself, and my reactions throughout the voyage."

Emotions and dilemmas encountered during the trip were as diverse as the weather conditions. At once bored, frightened, content, and amazed, Spencer learned much about himself during the past month.

"There were only two times when I was bored," he stated. "Actually, it was that I was tired of doing the same thing, and I couldn't figure out what I wanted to do. Sometimes I'd think the ocean is so big, this is going to be such a long trip."

Then just as quickly, emotions would flip. "Sometimes, I just felt like crying. At first I thought it was because I was overtired. Then after some sleep, I'd realize there was more to it. I'd hear some news on the radio about a disaster like when the training ship sank off Bermuda. Or, one time, I heard someone on the ham radio talking about his mother who just died. I felt terrible.

Cohasset Olympic hero remembered

By Jane Lane

His face is remembered now in yellowed photographs lovingly placed upon the worn pages of a scrapbook.

His name will never be forgotten, penetrated into the pages of history.

Ellery Clark, whose name is often preceded with a perfunctory title "Cohasset's own," was and always will be an Olympic hero. Almost 100 years have passed, but the skill and dedication of this scholar-athlete will not diminish.

As our nation readies itself for the summer Olympic games, we take time to remember the men who created this hallowed tradition. Ellery Clark was one of those men.

As an undergraduate at Harvard, Clark was an outstanding track and field athlete. When he was chosen along with several male classmates to compete in the first Olympics of the modern era, Clark probably did not comprehend the magnitude of the task before him, nor the consequences of his efforts.

He was not alone in his misconception regarding "The Games." In a letter signed by a university official, dated March 4, 1896, it was written, "we have decided to let you go to Greece . . . of course you take your own risks as far as courses are concerned."

The first modern Olympics were reinstituted the spring of 1896 in Athens, Greece: The befuddled coaching and the confusion surrounding the date of the Olympic competition has been well documented. But despite all hurdles placed before him, Clark will always be remembered as the magnificent American runner who won two first-place medals at the games.

No one seizes those memories more tirelessly than his son, Ellery Clark Jr., an author and avid factfinder.

It is his notebook that contains pages of photographs depicting his father in various poses. Each worn picture is neatly inscribed with the date, and the particular event in which he was shown.

That Clark Sr. was a striking man is easily recognized. Lean and muscular, he seemed much taller than other subjects within the camera's frame. "Oh yes," daughter-in-law Grace Clark says. "He was six feet tall, a very large man."

Always precise, whether it is with words or dates, Clark Jr. interjects a correction to that observation. "No, he was five feet, 11 and one-half inches - not quite six feet," he states.

Clark's efforts did not conclude with Olympic competition, as his son remembers. He was a track and field superstar before that label was so carelessly tossed

A summer visit to Sandy Beach

Just when you thought it was safe to go into the water.

When it's not Red Tide, it's something else. Tuesday afternoon sharks were sighted in the waters off Sandy Beach.

Although once officials reached the area, no sharks were found, lifeguards at the beach ordered the waters temporarily vacated. The police and Coast Guard arrived at the scene, but no fish were to be found.

A spokesman for the Coast Guard said after interviewing several spectators at the beach, it may have been a school of bluefish rather than shark. Some people said they saw two sharks about four feet long, others claim there was one two-foot fish in the water. From all accounts, it certainly wasn't any close relative of Jaws.

Whether it was bluefish or shark, it seemed to have hooked a left turn, and was last seen heading for the New England Aquarium.

Cohasset's week . . .

Mutual aid for details

Police Chief Joseph Kealey explained this week that because there is no auxiliary force in effect, other towns are often called for police details in Cohasset.

A mutual aid agreement worked out between several area towns specifies that officers from other towns may be called for Cohasset police details if there are no available Cohasset officers. Chief Kealey said this is an efficent, and less expensive method of handling the number of details which increase during the summer.

According to Chief Kealey, an active auxiliary force requires all participants to pass a written exam, be certified in CPR, and to complete firearms and law examinations. "I'd rather have a regular officer who's on the job every day, rather than using an auxiliary officer," he said.

Summertime in Cohasset constitutes many hours of overtime details for officers. The water main construction on Atlantic Avenue has been a primary source of detail work, along with the South Shore Music Circus.

Although some local towns hire part time officers in the summer through criminal justice departments of area colleges, Chief Kealey said that requires the town to pay extra salaries, uniform and training fees for the additional personnel.

Committee appointments

Town Moderator William Weeks recently made two appointments to the School Facilities Committee.

George L. Marlette III of Rustic Drive, and Robert G. Beggan of Sankey Road were named to the group.

Marlette will serve the balance of a five-year term which concludes in 1988. Beggan will also serve a five-year appointment which will end in 1989.

Record bike-a-thon

The cohasset Teachers Association is extremely pleased to announce that $4,299.10 has been collected to date from the Annual Ride-A-Bike event held in May.

This is a record sum of money collected by the 132 riders whose sponsors pledged a certain amount of money per mile; and from the generous donations of many residents. This fund-raising event supports the more than 200,000 members of the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens.

One-third of the money collected will remain in the local C.T.A. Ride-A-Bike account. Committee members to oversee the account are: Mary Brennock, Treasurer- Irene Volpe (Osgood Representative)- Frank Deakin (Deer Hill Representative)- George Fortin President of the C.T.A.- and Patrick Plante, Coordinator of the Annual Ride-A-Bike event.

The C.T.A. extends thanks to all who made this fund-raiser so successful, and to Patrick A. Plante Jr. who rode forty miles and raised the most money-$446.00.

Studds Meeting

There will be a coffee for Gerry Studds Thursday, July 19 at 7:30 p.m. in Karen Corcoran's home. Anyone interested in meeting Gerry is welcome to attend. Please call Karen at 383-6767 for more information.

No sewage bypass

An official from the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering has reassured town officials that there was no bypass from the Cohasset sewage treatment plant last month.

Although an article published last month in the local daily newspaper attributed the high bacteriological testing of Cohasset Harbor to a bypass, such an event never occurred, according to Robert Fagan, deputy regional environmental engineer for DEQE.

"Please be advised that the Department has no evidence that a bypass had occurred. In addition, Mr. Sabin Lord, Water Pollution Control Section Chief of the Northeast office, has informed this office that the Cohasset Wastewater Treatment Plant personnel have an excellent record of cooperation with the Department and would have notified his office if a bypass had occurred," Fagan wrote.

The official was referring to correspondence from Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous to Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis. In the letter, Eliopolous criticized the sewer commission and plant management for failing to notify the Board of Health about the alleged bypass. DeSantis replied later that there was no such incident, and that in the future, if she had any questions regarding plant operation, she could walk to the rear of her office building and talk to the plant supervisor.

In his letter, Fagan noted that the harbor will remain closed to shellfishing until the source of the pollution has been identified and eliminated.

Ketcham rejects amendment

Burk Ketcham, a member of the Straits Pond Management Committee, informed the sewer commission last week he is not in favor of sewering the Route 3A business district, as approved in an amendment to the Ward report at Town Meeting.

"My basic concern is that the 3A amendment has the potential to sink a strong effort to be innovative," he wrote.

"The design flows for the proposed (innovative) system included a 10 percent growth factor for areas already substantially developed. It did not include 3A. A rigorous analysis is essential to elevate the consequences of adding substantial flows from 3A and the potential for precluding future options due to flow limitations from possible problems areas, such as Straits Pond," Ketcham added.

Recreation problems

Although they knew plans were brewing for renovations to the Town Hall auditorium, the Recreation Commission will still have trouble searching for new areas to schedule some programs.

Recreation Director Jack Worley said the commission was aware several months ago that plans to renovate the Town Hall could include demolition of the auditorium and stage. But the commission is still in a quandry as to where certain programs will be held.

Currently registration for facility permits and recreation programs are held in the vacant auditorium. Aerobics classes, a very popular program, is also held in the hall.

Worley said some classes have already been rescheduled into other towns because of a lack of adequate facilities within Cohasset. The schools are one possibility, he added, but attempting to squeeze them into an available time slot among other school programs is often an impossibility, he added.

The commission will be discussing the problem at its next schedule meeting.

Evie Young

There are many who are unshakable in their belief that the mountains, meadows, falls and deep waters of Norway's fjord country offer the world's most enchanting scenery. If these people are wrong, the margin of error is too small to worry about. The fjords are so breathtaking that they are difficult to appreciate in a short visit. Norway has hundreds of these glacially carved sea inlets, enough to give it a 17,000-mile coastline. Fortunately, whether the trip is to be long or short, travelers can spare themselves the some times tough choice of wh to start by first going to the cient trading city o Bergen. It is an ideal jumping-off point for visitors who wa to see some of the most dramatic fjords.

"I realized my family and friends were more important to me than I ever thought," he continued. "I think I'm a different person now. The facade has been stripped away. I'm more sensitive and more feeling toward other people's problems."

Spencer's own problems during his adventure were kept to a minimum, although the SummerSalt is now undergoing some post-race repairs at the Cohasset boatyard.

Although he predicted a 29-day voyage, Spencer knows exactly where the extra time was added. During near-hurricane gales of 50 knots, his sail blew out and gnarled itself around the mast. With every bit of determination and strength, he finally unjammed the sail and tore it down from the post. It took 24 hours to unscramble the knotted sail and replace it with the spare, he said.

But that misadventure was not the nightmare that stirred inside the Cohasset sailor throughout the voyage. It was the inherent and real fear of being run over by a ship.

That might seem an impossibility to some, but to a transAtlantic sailor, it is an all too common occurrence. As Spencer so deftly explained, in a singlehanded voyage, the captain must take time out to sleep once and a while . So the boat is put into an automatic pilot. It is up to other ships at sea to be aware of others' presence.

Spencer had three "near-misses" that continue to trouble him. In two instances, the other ships spied him and navigated around him. But he was so close to a fishing troller abut 50 miles off Nantucket "I could have thrown something aboard the boat," adding that if he had a grenade handy, that would have been a suitable something.

Although the now-bearded sailor is well tanned, he noted that came after the completion of the race. During the Newport celebrations, Spencer spent more time atop the boat than throughout the voyage. As a singlehanded sailor, he had to spend most of his time fixing things within the cabin, or plotting navigation courses. There was precious little time for sunbathing. And often the weather was not conducive to such inactivity, he added.

Days would be filled with sunshine and warm gentle winds. And just as quickly, gales would blow in, and rain would burst from a never-ending expanse of clouds. Waves would rise to heights unimaginable to someone unfamiliar with oceanic sailing. As Spencer noted, "you have to remember, this was the ocean. There are big waves."

So big, that the boat would be leaning at a keel for around. For 23 years he competed in various local and national amateur events, a record for longevity.

In addition, he continued to compete in 21 different events, another record yet to be equaled. "Not even Jim Thorpe, who was a superman, competed in that many events," Clark Jr. notes with pride.

It was during his senior year at Harvard when Clark Sr. made the long voyage to Athens. His first place finishes won him a medal in the high jump with an effort of five feet, 11 and three-quarter inches. He also won the running long jump with a 20 feet, nine and three-quarter inches attempt.

That year, Clark participated in what has been called the father of the modern decathalon. Ten grueling events comprised the competition, including the running high jump, the running long jump, the pole vault, the 56 pound weight, the 16 pound shotput, the 16 pound hammer, the half-mile walk, the one-mile race, the 100 yard dash, and the 120 yard high hurdles.

In recognition of his outstanding efforts and ability, Clark was also presented a special award from King Constantine of Greece.

So much history is alive within the rooms of the Clark home on Jerusalem Road. Clark Jr. was born in the home, and he and wife Grace live their summers in the graceful house that embraces the memories of years past.

Clark proudly displays the two beautifully-engraved medals awarded his father 90 springs before. He quickly explains that indeed these medals, embossed with the image of Zeus on one side, and etchings of the Parthenon and the Acropolis on the other, are not gold.

Although they were awarded the first-place winners, they were made from silver. There were no gold medals. A second place finisher received bronze medals. "The third place competitor got a handshake," Clark states.

Clark Sr. was born in West Roxbury, and later competed in amateur athletics with the Boston Athletic Association. He never turned to professional athletics. "he was a purist-amateur," his son claims.

His family summered in Cohasset, participants for many years in "cooling" duckhunting, a family passion for many years, he explains. Clark Sr. bought the Jerusalem home in 1902 and resided there for more than 40 years.

His long, muscular frame was a common sight along Cohasset streets, running along Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue, near Marsh's Corner, his son notes. He practiced many of his events on the old Williams estate off Atlantic Avenue.

After the international heroics of the Olympics, Clark Sr. settled back into collegiate life and earned a law degree from Harvard. He later became executive secretary of the Massachusetts Humane Society, and was a distinguished author and poet. He was an instructor and coach at various times at Harvard and at Browne and Nichols in Cambridge.

His life was filled with honor and achievement. But his son, a noted historian, author and athlete himself, said above all, his father was "a generous and gracious man. He was very modest. Everything that happened to him was like Christmas for him. He couldn't believe what was happening in his life."

In a moment shared by father and son, the elder once told his young child that the proudest moment in his life was standing aside the American flag as it was raised twice in that foreign land - a tribute to the best athlete in the world.

Olympic Champion Honored

Cohasset's only Olympic Games Champion will be honored at the Cohasset Historical Society's Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer Street, Sunday, July 22 at 4 p.m.

The occasion will be highlighted by the presentation to the Historical Society of a framed athletic photograph and biographical material relating to longtime Cohasset resident Ellery Clark, Sr., winner of two track and field events at the first modern Olympic Games held at Athens, Greece in 1896. At the Athens Games, Clark won both the running high jump and running long jump competitions. In addition to his Olympic medals, he was presented with a special award by the King of Greece.

Ellery Clark, born in 1874, spent most of the summer months of his lifetime as a resident of Cohasset, living in the residence now lived in by his son, Ellery Clark, Jr. and family, on Jerusalem Road. Ellery Clark, Sr. was an outstanding athlete at Harvard and for the Amateur Athletic Union, competing in numerous track and field events over a span of many years.

In 1897, and again in 1903 he was the A.A.U's National All-Around Track and Field Champion. He excelled in that grueling series of events which was the predecessor of the modern decathalon. Chosen in 1896 as one of several Harvard undergraduate athletes representing the United States at the Athens Olympics, Clark had the unique experience of arriving at the site of the competition just one day ahead of the actual events he was to enter, due to the differences in the calendar used to schedule the Olympic Games. Overcoming the handicap, he competed against and beat some of the world's best track and field athletes to win his two medals.

At the forthcoming Lothrop House event, Ellery Clark, Jr. will present the photograph of his father to the Historical Society.

Ellery Clark, Jr., was born in Cohasset in August of 1909, and has been a lifelong resident of the town during summer months. A graduate of Harvard and Boston University, he was Professor of Naval History and of English, and was Assistant Coach of Track and Cross Country until his retirement from the U.S. Navy in 1971. He holds the permanent rank of Captain, U.S.N. Commissioned as a Naval Officer in 1933, he served as Damage Control Officer on the 'Essex' class aircraft carrier 'Randolph' during the Pacific War. An avid follower of the Boston Red Sox, Clark has written three books about the team. He also is co-author of three textbooks on Naval History.

Also on the list of speakers at the July 22 Lothrop House presentation are President Constance W. Parker of the Historical Society, and Cohasset's Joe Wood, a lifelong friend of the Clark family. Light refreshments will be served.

Members of the Historical Society, friends of the Clark family, neighbors, and all who have an active interest in the story of Cohasset's first and only Olympic Games Champion are invited to attend. Please call the Historical Society for reservations, 383-6930 or 383-0773.

days at a time, the captain crawling aboard the deck, hanging on to anything secured down. Remarkably, seasickness was never a problem. "I told myself I couldn't get sick. And I didn't," the determined sailor said.

There was one potentially disastrous problem that was neatly averted. As Spencer said, "I was proud of my reactions to situations. I am really happy with myself now, and I'm happy with the way I reacted to adverse situations."

One of those situations was mid-way through the trip when a rather voluminous wave crushingly settled the boat back to the water. The crash broke the pipe to his water supply.

"I was amazed at my reaction," he continued. "After things calmed down, I realized I did not have any more water and I was in the middle of the Atlantic. So I inventoried my liquids aboard, the juices, the milk and later, the rainwater. I said to myself, there, I'm all set. I have all the liquids I need. Let's go."

It was an experience he realized was unique, one not shared by many. It was, he confided, the toughest challenge he ever confronted. "But I wouldn't do it again - I've done it. Now, if someone offered me a half million dollar boat to sail around the world, I'd probably accept," he added.

"I got very close to myself last month," Spencer continued. "I have started to think about the priorities in my life. And if people think that before I liked to take time off from work to play - well, I'm worse than before."

The life of a Scituate Coast Guardsman

By Mike Berger

The headline in the Boston Sunday Globe Parade magazine read "They guard our shores, watch for drug smugglers and illegal aliens but mainly they save lives. —"You Don't Have Time To Be Scared."

Such is life as a Coast Guardsman. You only notice them when you read about a rescue. But locally there they are, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, maintaining operations in a trailer off Edward Foster Road near Scituate Harbor.

Lifesaving has been the fundamental mission of the Coast Guard which was created in 1790. Simply put, the Coast Guard is the federal government on the water.

Under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transportation, the 39,000 member armed service is responsible for insuring safety and enforcing the law on all American water jurisdiction.

But their duties are multi-dimensional. Some of their responsibilities are cleaning up oil spills, maintaining buoys and other aids to navigation, overseeing port safety, and inspecting merchant ships for sea safety.

Other major duties are guarding fisheries in the 200-mile zone of the U.S. fishery control, and protecting against accidents involving hazardous materials by inspecting shore sites.

The Coast Guard is also the government's branch on the water for enforcement of gun, alcohol, drug and immigration laws.

At the Scituate Coast Guard Station, there are 25 men and two women assigned to patrol the area from Nantasket and Hull to Manomet in Plymouth.

Currently, the station is operating out of five trailers in back of the demolished Coast Guard Station which was destroyed in a fire this winter.

Three trailers are used for operations and administration and two others are used for berthing.

Although the Coast Guard station was set to be renovated, the major fire set back a construction completion date by two or three months.

Scituate Coast Guard Chief William Rowland anticipates his men and women will be living in the new quarters by Thanksgiving.

Rowland said the layout of plans he has seen is quite an improvement over prior conditions. He said there will be more privacy and living facilities for 24 people. "No more will there be two to three people to a room," said Rowland.

There will also be adjoining bath facilities and a larger communications-watchroom. The Coast Guard is also considering and investigating the possibility of a major renovation of the boathouse and boating mooring facilities.

BOATING EQUIPMENT

There are four patrol boats available. The first is a 44-foot motor lifeboat capable of rescues in extremely hazardous seas and also capable of rolling over and righting itself and continuing on with the mission. This boat is currently being updated in Boston and out of operation.

A 41-foot utility boat is a fast responder and is a moderate weather conditions boat. A 21-foot Stamas outboard is used as a fast responder boat in good weather for missions, inlets and bays.

A 14-meter rigid and inflatable Avon boat is used for rescue work in breaking seas.

JOB RESPONSIBILITIES

The Scituate station enlisted personnel include the officer in charge or Chief Boatswain Mate and a First Class Boatswain mate who is the main engineering technician and petty officer, a Second Class Boatswain and seamen. Rowland said they are the "workhorses and they deserve all the credit."

All of the seamen were recruited by the U.S. Coast Guard and attended a seven to nine week military boot camp at Camp Main, New Jersey. They were then

Coast Guard report

TUESDAY, JULY 3

9:30 a.m., received call from vessel "Canvas Back" that a 25 foot wooden boat was adrfit one mile north of Minot Light. There were no persons on board the vessel and it appeared to be in pretty bad shape. CG unit was sent out to retrieve the boat and bring it back to the station.

8:16 a.m., received call from Plymouth Harbormaster that a 45 foot fishing vessel was disabled one mile south of Gurnet Point. CG unit got underway to assist. They arrived on scene and towed the vessel into Plymouth Harbor.

1:48 p.m., while on the way back from Plymouth Harbor CG unit came across a 17 foot outboard with engine problems. They towed the vessel into Scituate Harbor.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 4

2:03 p.m., received report from the fishing vessel "Andy Lynn" reporting the 38 foot cabin cruiser "White Star" disabled, out of fuel, one mile east of Gurnet Point. CG unit was dispatched and towed the vessel to Plymouth Harbor. A CG boarding was conducted and found the vessel in violation of federal law; no numbering on vessel and no certificate of registration on board.

3 p.m., while CG unit enroute on previous case, they sighted a capsized catamaran with three persons in the water two miles east of New Inlet, persons attempting to reright vessel. CG unit stood by until Harbormaster unit arrived on scene.

3:25 p.m., received report from Scituate Harbormaster of a 15 foot catamaran capsized by Buoy No. 4, Scituate Harbor. Harbormaster unit has recovered one person from the water, requests CG assistance in rerighting the vessel. CG unit dispatched, rerighted subject vessel among heavy boating traffic and high winds.

4:14 p.m., received report from the vessel "Fish Hawk" that a 25 foot sailing vessel was disabled with a broken rudder two miles east of New Inlet with nine persons aboard. CG auxiliary vessel "Helbra" was dispatched. Upon arrival on scene, "Helbra" learned from sailing vessel that five of the nine persons aboard were from a 15 foot outboard that had sank in the same position. The sailing vessel had broken its rudder in rescuing the five from the water. The "Helbra" took the sailing vessel in tow to Scituate Harbor where the tow was relieved by the Harbormaster. CG unit was dispatched to the area to try and locate the now reported half-submerged boat. CG unit could not locate it and was recalled to station.

assigned to units, a Coast Guard cutter or to a station.

The 27 seamen at the Scituate station are divided into two duty sections of 12 employees. Three people remain at the Scituate station all the time.

Each duty section usually works 48 hours and then has 48 hours off-duty. Each section has every other weekend off.

Each section has eight members designated as rescue crews with other person designated as the "Officer of the Day." Four other people are designated as training boat crew members.

All of the 27 people must be readily available to work anytime. All crew members must live within one hour driving time of the Scituate station.

DAILY ROUTINE

Here is an average day for a crew member. The seaman arrives at the station at 7:45 a.m. for a briefing and then begins work at 8 a.m. Work will end at 4 p.m. Several crew members will take four-hour watches in the radio communications trailer and there will always be several seamen onboard a patrol boat at any time during the day.

Other duties include ensuring the rescue and boating gear and operating equipment in the trailers are in proper order.

Since the seamen are operating out of the trailers, meals are a problem. There is no sufficient place for storing food supplies. One man does a chow run for hot meals per shift.

DRUG SMUGGLING

"I would be foolish to think there is no problem within the boundaries of the station's operating area. This area is no different than any other other in the U.S. I along with other law enforcement officials are concerned with smuggling into this country, the smuggling of drugs and other contraband," said Rowland.

CHIEF WILLIAM ROWLAND

Chief Rowland was born and raised in Fields Corner and worked himself up through the ranks to be the Scituate Coast Guard Chief Boatswain Mate or Officer in Charge.

Rowland says he attended several excellent training schools which instructed him on maritime and law enforcement rules and leadership, management and public relations.

Althought the Scituate station is not actively engaged in the Navy (youth) Sea Cadet program, Rowland said this will change once the new station is completed.

"We intend to be very active. Once the new station is finished, the Sea Cadets will be able to hold meetings at the station and the Cadets will augment crews on my boat on training missions," Rowland said.

"I myself was a Sea Cadet in the mid 60s," he added.

"Before you drink, be a responsible boat operator."

Rowland said Coast Guard statistics show 65 percent of all boating accidents occurred when the operator was under the influence of alcohol or marijuana.

" Regardless of how the boat is equipped or your own personal experience as an operator, you're waiting for an accident to happen when you operate the boat while under the influence of alcohol or other controlled substances," Rowland said.

BOATING SAFETY

Like other Coast Guard leaders, Rowland wants to stress boating safety.

Although June 2-9 was nationally Safe Boating Week, the week's message or theme must be repeated every day.

Financial aid

The latest publication of Sources of Financial Aid for Massachusetts Students is now available. The pamphlet is a compilation of efforts of four organizations: The Massachusetts Scholarship Office, Board of Regents of Higher Education, Massachusetts Higher Education Assistance Corporation and The Association of Independent Colleges and Universities in Massachusetts.

The publication provides information about how to apply for aid, and how the financial aid system works. It also contains organizations to contact for further information, and a list of other sources for further student aid. Aid programs, eligibility, and how and when to apply, plus the dollar value of the programs are explained.

State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, 3rd Plymouth district has obtained copies of this pamphlet for her constituents.

around town

☐ All of the new graduates had their newest memoir to past into the scrapbook arrived last week. The prom pictures came back and all are great! Ask any senior grad for a peek at his or hers, you can bet they are in a very accessible spot in their wallets.

☐ Another entrant was Charlie Marks, our former Town Clerk. Charlie won two medals, a silver and a bronze. Excellent effort for his first attempt at the Olympics.

☐ Lisa Creedon, Kimberly Ferreira and Bonnie McClay, seniors in the Suffolk University School of Management have been named to the Dean's Honors List for the spring semester of the 1983-84 academic year at Suffolk University in Boston.

☐Mary Regina Sullivan, daughter of Greg and Mary Sullivan, has been chosen to serve as a student ambassador for the Alumni Association of the University of New Hampshire.

She will work with the other student ambassadors to provide more direct and effective communication between students and alumni.

Sullivan, a junior majoring in communications, has been active in SAE Little Sister Program, Adopt-A-Grandparent Program and intramural sports.

☐Melody Ann Maurer of 493 Beechwood St., received a Master of Science degree at the May graduation of Boston University's Sargent College of Allied Health Maurer majored in physical therapy.

☐Maria Eleana Basteri surely proved herself a winner at a field day recently. Maria, a fifth grader at the Kingston Elementary School, won five ribbons (3 blues and 2 thirds) in her events. Don't think her grandparents aren't still telling everyone they meet..Charlie and Rose Pape are so excited that they have an athlete that they can cheer for, they'll tell all they see! Mom (Susan) is a little more low-key about the super efforts, but sure is a proud mom too.

☐By now I'm sure everyone has received their Rotary telephone book (the 21st edition), the main fundraiser that the Club puts together to use for the Scholarship Fund. The ads placed in the book help pay the printing costs, and the club updates it each year, so it is a super thing to have by the phone. Even the size is great, not bulky. Now that they have done their work, it's time for us to do ours...enclosed in the book is an envelope that can be used to mail in a donation that will go towards the scholarships (the last graduating class was awarded a total of $11,000 in five separate gifts). The Rotarians spend about six months each year on the project, help make it a success and mail your check today!

☐Cohasset's own Tim Myers, son of Dottie and Tom Myers, came home sporting a blue ribbon a few weeks ago. Tim was a participant in the special Olympics that was held at Boston University recently, and we all congratulate him.

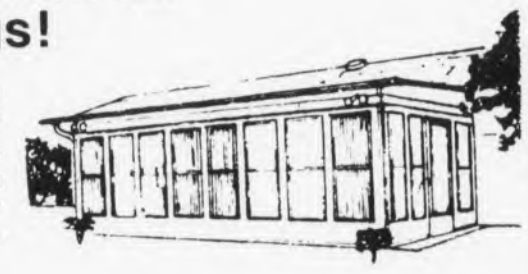
☐Kevin Leary received a well-earned honor last week, when he was selected as a member of the Mass Youth Soccer Association's 16 and under All Star team. He has travelled twice to Connecticut to play their team and recently participated in a weekend tournament held at Boston College. Kevin will be playing with the team in the regionals which will be held in Pennsylvania the week of July 22nd. Will keep you informed.

☐July 22 is an exciting date for us locally, as the Historical Society is planning a dedication and reception at the Lothrop House on that day. They are planning to honor Cohasset's first Olympic Champion, Ellery Clark. Mr. Clark was a member of the 1896 Olympic team and competed in Athens, Greece. At the dedication and reception, his son, Capt. Ellery Clark, Jr., U.S.N. (ret.), a lifelong Cohasset resident, will present a framed athletic photograph and a career biographical sketch of his father to the Historical Society. You can call the Historical Society for further details at 383-6930 or 383-0773. A unique event, not to be missed.

☐Pat Casey sure keeps real estate on the hop with his neat underground home that is so often written about. Last week the Patriot Ledger did a feature on it, complete with pictures and details about how the house actually works...fascinating, that's for sure. And, when it was written how cool it stays on the hot days ahead, it shouldn't amaze the Caseys to have guests who were not invited...sounds great!

☐Lew Crampton and his brother Hank were in Cohasset last week, back in the 'old stomping grounds' as it were. They are planning campaign strategy for the U.S. Congress, hoping to line up Cohasset people to lend a hand. To many it seems as though they are still little guys, but there it is folks...Lew Crampton is running for U.S. Congress as a Republican! Another Cohassetite makes the news.

☐Watch the Cohasset Hardware Window for the next Riding Club Horseshow date, the last one was fantastic to watch. Only the weather kept the day from being perfect, there were 36 riders and 23 horses entered. A lot of Cohasset gals got to great lengths to make the day a success, and it paid off grandly. Erin Powell, Heather Ripley, Lisa and Jennifer Powers, Jill Hamilton, Anne Marie McKenna and Karen Marks were the Cohasset contingent that participated, and did an outstanding job. Good work by all!



☐Tanna Kasperowicz and Ginny DeBassio have a grand idea that they are trying to get off the ground. Both are avid chess players (Tanna is an old hand at the game, Ginny was taught by Tanna recently) and would like to start a Chess Club, formed of all chess players at all levels. If you don't know how to play that's okay too, you can be taught. The time of day it will be held and the day that it will be held on is totally up to the people that want to get involved, so let them know. They are even willing to have a meeting to determine when and where is the best time for you, so give either gal a call and do it soon! Call Tanna at 383-9158 or Ginny at 383-0201 sounds like fun!

A non event

Things were sort of slow in Cohasset this week. The summer doldrums have arrived.

We couldn't dig up much dirt. No one has filed a lawsuit this week against the town. No one was fired, hired, or elected. The town hall stage hasn't been razed (yet). Summer can be boring - even in Cohasset.

So the media, in its never-ending search to fill reams of space within a newspaper, devised an event. Some people may have thought it was funny. Some think it was stupid. But this week's non-event in Cohasset was the sickout at the Cohasset Fire Department.

This sickout was so well organized, that firefighters had to be told by The Patriot Ledger that it "may" have been happening.

A reporter in the Quincy newsroom received a phone call from an unidentified person saying that union members of the Cohasset Fire Department were staging a sickout over heinous working conditions. The reporter called the station to check "the facts." The reporter was told by one of five union members on duty that Monday morning that there wasn't any sickout because they were indeed, in the flesh, right there at the fire station.

The Cohasset correspondent was sent to the station to double check, and returned with the correct information. No sickout.

But The Patriot Ledger newsroom decided that although all town officials and firefighters denied the accusation, the allegation belonged in print.

We are not quick to criticize The Patriot Ledger. The two Cohasset reporters are fine professionals. This non story was not of their making. This was an editorial decision made in Quincy and it was wrong.

Surely the Mariner is guilty of stupid mistakes. But this was no mistake on the part of the local daily. This was a calculated effort to publicize an incident that "may have been." No serious damage resulted - many people enjoyed it for the momentary levity it provided.

But, while they were at it, the Ledger added a paragraph or two and dredged up the old, stale problems between the union and the fire chief.

By any standard, this was a case of poor journalistic judgement. A lot of people in town and along the South Shore had a good laugh at the expense of the Ledger's credibility.

Cohasset has had its share of the limelight without unwarranted notoriety.

Paper chase

By Jane Lane

There is a problem in town. And it's spreading.

Cleaning products are at a premium. Wherever you look, in town hall bathrooms and in the fire station shower stalls, people are screaming for their Safeguard and Charmin.

Sure, it's the end of the fiscal year, you say. Money is tight. But what's to happen to our town when the executive secretary is delegated to handing out paper towels one sheet at a time to dirty office workers?

Why, there's a real danger of an outbreak of hepatitis in the fire department. They haven't been able to wash their hands for weeks. And the fire chief replied, bring your soap and toilet paper from home. Why, what's to [illegible] to their poor children?

Something has to happen now to correct this offensive wrong. We're not going to sit back and let our town employees deteriorate. This situation stinks.

We suggest that all townspeople Ban together to help our unfortunate employees. Let's share our Bounty with our friends and neighbors in their time of despiration (sic, isn't it).

Let's get those paper towels, deodorants, soaps, toilet paper, and disinfectants to the fire and police stations. Let's bring that Ajax and Windex to the town hall. Show them we [illegible].

So, send in that C[illegible]n - don't forget the Zest. It's for the good of the tow[illegible]

We've always tried to do what's best for each other.We can't let them down now. Our municipal workers are struggling to do a good job in the midst of a potential public health hazard. Why, it's amazing that the health agent hasn't walked across the street and ordered the fire station closed for business.

Share the wealth of paper products among the less fortunate. Nevermind squandering that last bottle of Fantasik when you know there are those who haven't used the stuff in who knows how long.

We'll all sleep a little sounder knowing that fire station glistens and the town hall restrooms are fully stocked.

What a great town.

A relaxing summertime view of Cohasset Harbor.

'Jump on the Dragon Wagon'

By Claire McDonough

"Do you think Mondale will choose a woman for a running-mate?" the Dragon asked.

I thought for a minute. "Maybe. It would provide balance for the ticket, show that he's serious about equal rights, and encourage women to participate in the political process.

"On the other hand," I continued, "the polls seem to indicate that the Democrats already have the women's vote, so perhaps it's not necessary for them to make this concession. It could be that the Republicans will be the first party to nominate a woman for vice president.

"On the third hand," I concluded, "any woman who can get Tip O'Neill's endorsement has to have something going for her."

The Dragon looked doubtful. "Do you really think there's a woman on the national scene who has the qualifications to be vice president?"

"Tell me," I demanded icily, "what sterling qualities have we demanded from our male vice presidents over the years?"

He considered the question.

"They've had to present a good appearance, be able to represent the president at funerals and other things he doesn't want to go to, be willing to run errands, look like they're paying attention at meetings and press conferences, and know how to talk for hours without saying anything of substance. Come to think of it, maybe it is a job for a woman."

"You'll pay for that," I hissed. "There's a certain male member of this household who talks all the time and never says anything of substance."

The Dragon raised a supercil ious eyebrow.

"I don't have to take that from someone who says 'on the third hand,' he replied smugly.

"And anyway," he continued, "I don't think Mondale has to choose a woman veep to get the woman's vote.

"As a matter of fact," he said sternly, "it would take a downright sexist individual to suggest he should."

"Then who do you think it should be?" I asked.

"Stop and think," he advised. "He needs someone with instant name recognition. A good family person. Someone who's respected for wisdom, restraint, and a rapier-like wit. Someone who'll make a good appearance on television. Someone whose name looks good on a bumper sticker. Someone who has a good slogan."

"You just lost me," I told him. "I was following you until you got to the part about the slogan."

He sighed patiently. "Slogans mean everything," he explained. "Think of 'I Like Ike.' 'Nixon's the One.' 'Madly for Adlai.'

"Here in this state we've seen how effective 'Put up your Duke' can be.

"Who knows if we ever would have had a President Harrison if it weren't for 'Tippecanoe and Tyler Too?' "

"I assume all this is leading up to a slogan you have in mind?" I suggested.

He blushed becomingly. "As a matter of fact it is. What do you think of 'Jump on the Dragon Wagon?' "

Gwinn submits his resignation

To the Board of Selectmen:

I have this day submitted to the Town Clerk my resignation as Sewer Commissioner, to take effect July 10 of this year.

When I was first elected Sewer Commissioner in 1980, Cohasset had voted in several Town Meetings, its intention to build a new wastewater treatment plant to correct both discharge permit violations and to meet earlier commitments to complete sewering problem areas. I felt then that my many years of experience as a practicing engineer would bring to the Sewer Board a special and useful expertise.

On June 21, 1984, the Special Town Meeting voted overwhelmingly (at least the 10% of the registered voters who attended) to reverse those earlier decisions in an attempt to export Cohasset's wastewater problems by going for a Hull connection.

I recently obtained a copy of the December, 1983 report, "Evaluation of Sewerage Facilities for Hull, Massachuseetts," prepared by the engineering firm Black & Veatch for the Town of Hull. This report (a copy of which is attached) documents the design deficie[illegible]es of the Hull plant. The consulting engineers have stated that a sum of $1,433,000 must be expended to correct the deficiencies in hope to avoid flooding and malfunction. These sums are in addition to those needed to correct inflow and infiltration in the Hull collection system.

While ordinarily in favor of regionalization, to take a financial responsibility for even a percentage of a crippled plant, to accept a flow limit on our needs, and to enter a landlord-renter relationship is not, in my judgment, in the best interests, long or short term, of

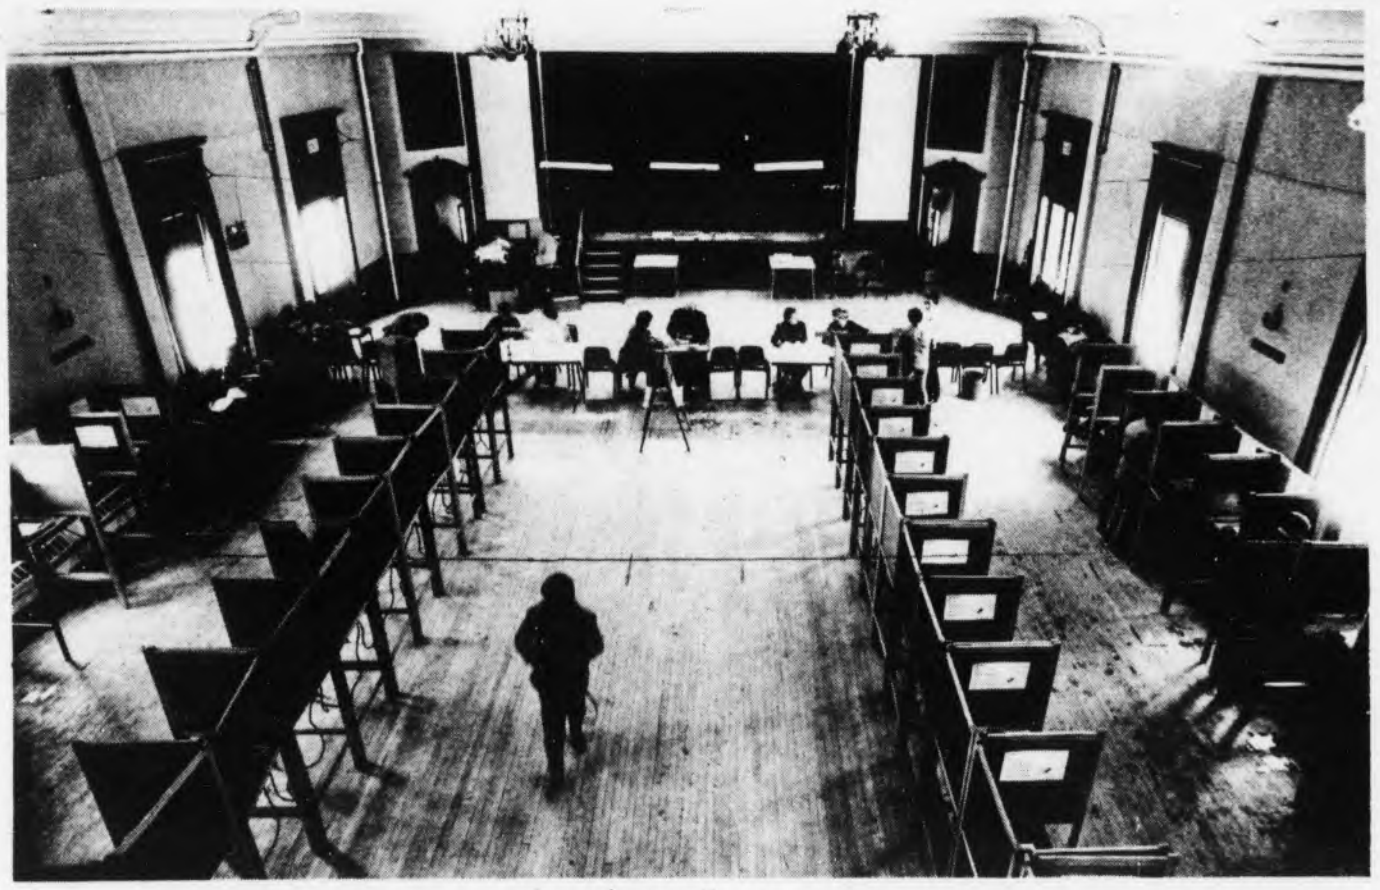
A history of Cohasset's Town Hall

(This is a history of Cohasset Town Hall, written by Historical Society Curator David Wadsworth Ed.)

The year 1857 saw completion of a new Town Hall in Cohasset, designed to serve both as a municipal office building and schoolhouse. Its location on Highland Avenue had been the site of an early private school called Cohasset Academy.

For some years, the Academy building had served as the town's assembly hall for Town Meetings, but had been outgrown. That early schoolhouse was moved to a new location on Beach Street where today it still is a private residence.

The new town hall was frequently referred to as the 'Town House', a name for municipal buildings used as far back in time as early Colonial days. As originally designed, Cohasset's Town Hall was the large rectangular building still there, but without the two 'mezzanine' sections on the front and rear of the structure. Over succeeding years the original building was enlarged by the addition of the present front entry and the back part, now housing the auditorium stage.



From its beginning, the Town Hall was intended to be a multi-function building, housing municipal offices and serving as a vital center for diverse community activities. The New England Town Hall of the 19th century was one of the focal points of community life in a time when government and its citizens co-existed for their mutual benfit.

Thus, during the latter 19th and early 20th centuries, a wide range of community groups were able to avail themselves of the space in the town's municipal building. There were, in fact, two assembly halls in the town hall at that time, appropriately called the upper and lower halls, and both could be used for a variety of functions.

By the beginning of this century Cohasset's Public Library had established its headquarters in the Town Hall, and space had been set aside for the Committee on Town History to display and store the towns valuable historical documents and artifacts. The Public Library soon moved to its new building on South Main Street, and the Committee on Town History eventually became the Cohasset Historical Society. During the latter 1800's the Town Hall became the site of one of Cohasset's most colorful community endeavors, the annual Washington's Birthday Fancy Dress Ball. Each year that gala event was a highlight of the community's winter season, as townspeople in a diversity of costumes and masks packed one of the halls to dance and admire each other's artistic talents, to the delight of all.

At the other end of the scale, the town built its first jail in the Town Hall's cellar. This early 'lockup', consisting of two primitive and miniscule cells, frequently became the temporary lodging place for 'tramps' or transients seeking a place to stay overnight while they passed through the town. There being no full-time Police Department at that time, the 'lockup' was presided over by a Lockup Keeper appointed by the Town's Selectmen. The heavy iron barred door of one of the two lockups cells can still be seen in one corner of the Town Hall's cellar, though the 'tramps' have long since

Keep town stage

To the Editor:

'Is this going to be for town business or show business?' gibed Mark Lanza, Executive Secretary, in a recent interview appearing in the Patriot Ledger.

Does this easy quip reflect the attitude of Cohasset's selectmen as they consider the future of Cohasset's Town Hall- specifically, its auditorium and stage? I am confident that it does not. Unfortunately, this comment is not only glib, but it also infers that 'drama groups' (or, perhaps the Cohasset Dramatic Club in particular) are the lone users of the town stage and auditorium. This, of course, could not be further from the truth.

According to the 1977 Annual Report, 21 organizations make use of the Town Hall facilities. The Recreation Department, the most active participant, offers a continuous, wide variety of programs to both adults and children.

'If this is going to be a municipal building, I don't see the need for an auditorium and a stage,' stated Selectman John De Bassio in an article featured in the Cohasset Mariner, July 5, 1984.

Here, then, is the vital issue: we, the citizens of Cohasset, must decide if we want to retain a town hall that serves the needs of the townspeople at large, or a town office building that serves the needs of the town government alone.

'If they have to invest money to renovate (the high school auditorium) and they get the blessing of the school committee, then I think that should be their option,' continued Mr. De Bassio in the same article.

This simply misses the point. Cohasset's high school stage is a perfectly acceptable facility. Its problems lie not in viability, but in availability. If the director of the high school senior class play, with its cast of ninety students, had enormous difficulty in securing the high school stage for rehearsal, non-school groups will surely find it completely inaccessible. Also, the high school stage and auditorium are inappropriate for the functions of many groups; the school gymnasiums, a possible option for these groups, are in almost continual use.

'It's a disgrace we don't have a place we can meet in a proper atmosphere,' Mr. De Bassio went on.

The Town Hall auditorium has not been painted in well over twenty years. The Cohasset Dramatic Club has made an effort at beautification by installing the red velvet stage curtain and matching curtains at the windows. The auditorium may appear shabby simply because it needs a coat of paint.

'If it's going to be a municipal office building, we shouldn't have to pay to maintain a theatre,' complained Mr. De Bassio.

The Dramatic Club does not use the Town Hall stage and auditorium on sufferance alone. A fee is paid for all incidents of use: peformances, rehearsals, set construction, painting and set striking.'

'I don't think we can co-exist in here,' Mr. De Bassio expressed.

And, why not? The Cohasset Dramatic Club has been in continuous operation for 63 years on this same Town Hall stage. These activities (and the activities of the other participating groups) have not interfered with the official workings of the town, nor should they in the future.

'Let them justify why we should keep it as a theatre,' challenged Mr. De Bassio.

The Town Hall stage, while small, was well enough designed and equipped for the professional theatre that once flourished there. Humphrey Bogart, Zero Mostel, Thornton Wilder, Sinclair Lewis, Broderick Crawford, Nigel Bruce, Lloyd Bridges comprise only a handful of famous actors who have graced our stage. In fact, the facilities were sufficiently adequate to launch the preview of the Broadway musical, Lend an Ear. In Cohasset's Town Hall, we have an efficient stage; in fact, it is one of the most workable stages in our five-town area. It would be a shame to destroy such a valuable facility by making a thoughtless, cavalier decision.

The residents of this town should not forget the exhaustive planning process followed by the Town Offices Space Study Committee headed by Dan Cotton between 1977-1982. This study was conducted at a final cost to the Town of almost $30,000 for architects and engineers. At the outset of its deliberations, the Committee established a number of goals. One of these was to take into account the needs of other organizations that make regular and occasional use of town facilities.

The Committee's process was open and thorough. It included:

A review of all town departments to determine their space needs. Expansion requirements to account for town and department personnel groups were compared against 38 other towns- some twice the size of Cohasset, and an analysis of some 21 outside organizations who make use of the Town Hall to determine the extent of those needs.

With the help of an architect hired by the Committee, seven alternatives for use of the Town Hall were developed. Total elimination of the auditorium space and its conversion to offices was discarded due to cost consideration and a perceived townwide philosophy that the Town Hall should be more than town offices.

To this end, the proposed, and least costly, plan provided for some expansion of office space on the first floor and the reduction of the auditorium seating capacity from 250 to 150. This size was deemed adequate for nearly every present use, including elections, recreation, social gatherings, large hearings, dramatic presentations and public meetings- all with ample parking space.

The current planning process, it seems, ignores a well thought out plan; the dictates of the Board of Selectmen ignore the interests of some 21 organizations utilizing the auditorium space. Cohasset, then, will no longer have a Town Hall; it will have a town office building.

No community can live on government alone. Fairs, festivals, dances, plays lend flavor and zest to our lives here in Cohasset. Their absence will leave Cohasset bereft, indeed.

Selectman Rocco Luagelle, in the July 5, 1984 article appearing in the Cohasset Mariner summed up the matter simply and eloquently: 'This auditorium is still Cohasset. No ifs ands or buts about it. As much as some of you would like to see it (converted) it's still Cohasset...we've all felt that this is home.'

Helen Ketcham

Cohasset. The Ward report does recommend such action. That the Commonwealth will not fund certain portions of the Ward program, nor will it accept certain technical solutions, are only further minutiae my fellow sewer commissioners feel can be ignored.

In 1982, when Mr. DeSantis and Mr. Pounder joined the Board, I felt it my responsibility to provide continuity, to help implement a method of screening applicants for an A/I proposal, and to see the proposal brought to Town Meeting. This report proposes a Hull hookup, a program I can not support. Since, admittedly, this is a minority position, I think its best to resign, permitting the Board of Selectmen to appoint as commissioner, one who can muster some enthusiasm for the Hull adventure.

Very truly yours,
Joseph M. Gwinn

A look back at the history within Town Hall

departed, and the cell now has become a storage room for the town's community theater, the Cohasset Dramatic Club.

Numerous organizations availed themselves of the upper and lower Town Halls for such diverse activities as basketball games, weekly moving pictures (Cohasset's first movie entrepreneur was hustled out of town by the Selectmen when found to have been showing films of questionable taste in another town), fashion shows, demonstrations of home cooking, minstral shows, musical concerts and recitals by local young artists, dramatics, and even several boxing matches held for charitable purposes.

During those years the town offices were located principally on the building's second floor which was reached by and impressively wide central stairway rising from the entrance lobby to the front of the mezzanine level where the Town Fathers served as Selectmen, Assessors and Overseers of The Poor. Town Meetings and elections were an important part of community life, and many a close contest was decided at the Town Hall as political careers waxed or waned in response to public sentiment of the day.

During the 1920's the future of the Town Hall was a subject for discussion and debate. Voters seemed at first to prefer constructing a new building to house municipal offices and community activities. Thus a set of architects plans and detail drawings was commissioned for a new brick Classical Town Hall, to be constructed in the space adjacent to the existing building. Those plans and drawings still exist in the Town's Archives, though the building itself is nowhere to be seen. The plan called for a large auditorium, an acknowledgement of the value of a central hall provided by the townspeople for their own use. The citizens and their government were still able to co-exist under the same roof.

In preparation for the construction of the new hall, the Town took by eminant domain a plot of land immediately adjacent to the older hall. The pre-empted land was the site of Cohasseter Frank Browne's large Victorian mansion house, from which he was evicted by order of the Selectmen. The house was razed and the land cleared. Selectmen prepared to declare the old Town Hall surplus and place it up for public auction. At the same time, alternative plans were in the making, and at Town Meeting the voters changed their mind.

The fine 19th century structure was saved and an extensive renovation undertaken. Today's municipal parking lot stands where Frank Browne's house once stood, barely a fitting memorial to the needless destruction of one of the town's finer homes. The mid-1920's renovation of the Town Hall saw the construction of today's large, high-ceilinged auditorium, a feat accomplished by elevating the second floor up to its present level. The office section of the building is supported by large vertical steel beams, visible at intervals along the sides of the auditorium. Regrettably, the large central stairway leading upstairs was removed and today's narrow winding stairs were substituted, one of the less successful aspects of the 1920's renovation.

But the auditorium which emerged from that new design was to prove itself an emminently successful Town Hall and the best (and only) large multi-purpose hall facility within Cohasset's boundaries. It still is. The story of Cohasset's Town Hall is a fascinating one, and one that has not ended yet.

Minor League Baseball Champions

Congratulations go to the new champions of the Minor League, the Red Sox. Coached by both Sue Fiore and Jack Maynard the Red Sox surprised all and played very well to win the championship.

The members of the team are Peter Sheppard, Matt Silvia, Peter Curtin, Mark St.Onge, Tony Rinella, Tim Conroy, John Maynard, Peter Smith, Chris Stevens, Jody Kehoe, and Nathan Fiore.

Eighth Grade Boys' Basketball

Last Thursday the boys showed no signs of fatigue even though they lacked substitutes and overpowered Duxbury 62 to 39. This victory was due mainly to the great, unselfish passing by David Shumaker and outstanding defense by Chris Waters and Adam Whitman.

Cohasset's point guard, Jason Marsac, controlled the game's tempo and was helped by high scorer Michael Smith who had 18 points.

Freshman Girls' Basketball

The girls had a successful week, crushing both of their opponents Monday. Cohasset beat Scituate 45 to 12. The key to this game was the great hustling defense played by Cohasset which practically eliminated Scituate's offense. Cohasset's overall high scorer with 14 points was Maureen O'Leary.

On Tuesday, Cohasset faced another Scituate team which they quickly overpowered, and beat 58 to 14. Maureen O'Leary was once again the overall high scorer with 12 points. She was followed closely by Cindy Spooner who had 10 points. Melissa Shea sparked Cohasset's offense by pulling down many defensive rebounds and making quick outlet passes to start Cohasset's fast break. The girls were unselfish, and they all played as a team.

Cohasset Golf Club

The Fourth of July the Cohasset Golf Club held a tournament. The overall winner of the tournament was Bill Fitzgerald. In a tie for second were both Dave Londergan and Dave Hurlbut, and in fourth place was Pete Conway.

Flying Scot Race Series

The Flying Scots were unable to race Saturday due to poor weather conditions. However, in a makeup race Sunday, skipper Mike Ellis, along with his crew, Pete Johnson, managed to pull out a win. Coming from fourth place, Ray Kasperowicz with his crew, Tim Lyons, was able to pass two boats and finish second. Bob Smith, also caught two boats to come in third. In fourth place was Steve Bartow; fifth place was Bob Jackson, and in sixth place was Dick Moore.

The race was run under steady winds, about 10 to 12 miles per hour, with gusts up to 15 to 18 miles per hour. The seas were about two to four feet high.

College Gate

Several local students are attending College Gate, a three-week summer program for bright youngsters in Kindergarten through grade three, at the Plymouth River School in Hingham. The half-day program is totally academic in nature, featuring over 20 courses not offered in traditional schools.

Local students attending the summer program include: Dawn Meehan, Jessica L. Jenkins, Dean Volungis, Matthew D. Gromada, Victoria Maynard, John Nathan Maynard, and Elizabeth O'Brien.

Family Story Hours

"Family Story Hour" has become a popular summer tradition at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Guest story-tellers from the New England area will once again present a series of evening programs for family enjoyment. The Children's Room is pleased to offer these story hours Monday evenings, beginning July 9 at 7:30.

Ms. Carole Duhammel, Children's Librarian in the Brockton Public Library system, will be our first guest story-teller. Ms. Duhammel will tell a variety of short tales, many of which involve audience participation. She is also noted for incorporating puppets in her program.

An accomplished teller of tales, Ms. Duhammel has performed throughout the Brockton system. Her program will last about 45 minutes.

Pre-school story hour

A pre-school story hour will be held Fridays at 10 a.m. at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library starting July 13 and continuing through August 17.

Children need not register for this series, but must be at least 3 1/2 years old. Weezie Welz, Nancy Connolly, Lee Jenkins, Joan Kovach, Betsy Connolly, Amy Golden, and Sue DeMichael are planning summer story times. Story sessions last approximately 40 minutes.

Share-A-Classic

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will sponsor two Share-A-Classic series for children age seven and older in two Cohasset locations as part of the Recreation Program.

Share-A-Classic will begin Monday, July 9 at the Osgood School playground and continue every Monday and Wednesday at 1 p.m. through August 15.

Joan Kovach, Andrew Glasfeld and Cissie Cullivan will read The Reluctant Dragon, Dick Whittington and His Cat, The Enormous Egg and The Cay. Each program will last approximately 40 minutes and is open to all good listeners over the age of seven. Listeners need not register for the recreation program.

A pool-side Share-A-Classic will begin Tuesday, July 10 at 4 p.m. at the Cohasset Swim Center off Sohier Street. This series will continue Tuesdays and Thursdays at 4 p.m. through August 16.

Rose Collins, Mary Brustin, Linda Henderson and Weezie Welz will read from Mr. Popper's Penguins, The Lion, The Witch and the Wardrobe, Call it Courage, The Cay, and selections from Hans C. Andersen. All good listeners age 7 and over are invited to attend.

The Share-A-Classic concept encourages the reading of the best in children's literature to older children and adults in order to lure young minds into the excitement and fulfillment of books. Few children learn to love books on their own. This outreach program by a staff of committed volunteers is a positive influence towards a life-long love of books and reading.

Call Ms. Mitchell or Ms. Pope (383-1348) in the Children's Room any afternoon for more information.

With exquisite timing, the new Scituate Harbor Yacht Club cookbook has just been released. Included in its 142 pages of recipes is a novel section entitled: "Mariner." No, it's not dedicated to the weekly paper you know and love, but is instead, a collection of helpful hints and recipes so timely now at the start of the boating season; appealing as well to summer vacationers who opt to do their thing camping, touring the countryside, or just plain picnicking. When this lovely season draws to an end, ski enthusiasts will also benefit from the practical suggestions on shopping, menu planning and food storage. From "Chicken in a Pouch" to "Clam Sauce for Linguine," each and every recipe in this particular section has pertinent remarks and, of course, there's nothing to prevent a landlubber from enjoying this dish right in his own back yard. Served hot or cold, is Ret'd. Commodore Peter G. Fallon prefaces the plastic-covered cookbook with a history of the club established in 1912. Former Commodore Donald Hagar recalls playing tennis there in 1914. The next page dedicates the book to the "Ladies Committees, past, present and future" and lists the 20 members of the Cook Book Committee chaired by Carol MacNeill and Nancy Callanan. Those wishing a copy of the book may call Carol at 545-3574 or Nancy at 545-1554, at any time after 6 p.m. More than one hundred members have contributed an appealing variety of favorite recipes reflecting a wide range of foods and appreciation of good eating. It's an eclectic collection ranging from such gourmet fare as Calzone, Herb Bread Boarding House—Nantucket, Gougere, Scallops Almondine, Salad Nicoise, Epicurean Sandwich; to standard favorites such as Minced Clam Dip, Blueberry Muffins, Wacky Cake, Tuna Vegetable Casserole and Rice Salad, When your fisherman returns with the day's catch, here is a SHYC recipe for

PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S FISH CHOWDER

1/4 c. diced fat salt pork
3/4 c. diced onions
2 c. hot water
2 c. diced potatoes
2 lbs. haddock filets
1½ tsp. salt, dash pepper
4 c. milk

Slowly fry salt pork until crisp and golden. Remove and reserve. Add diced onions and cook until tender, but not colored. Add hot water and bring to a boil. Add diced potatoes and boil until almost tender. Add haddock filets and simmer gently until fish flakes at the touch of a fork. Add salt, pepper and milk and heat thoroughly, but do not boil. Add butter and bits of crisp pork. Serve in pre-heated soup bowls or mugs. Serves 6 to 8.

At the start of each section are helpful hints in preparing foods, such as: Pare 1/2" rings of chilled cantaloupe or honeydew melon. Fill with watermelon balls or fresh berries and sprinkle with lemon juice . . . store nuts in freezer for up to two years . . . remember scallions, leeks, garlic, shallots and onions, they add zest to any salad! . . . add a dash of sherry to anything canned . . . fix lunch at breakfast, for you never can predict weather changes when on board your boat . . . Flowers, such as calendula and nasturtium lend color to pale cream soups. If asked why we chose to make this area home, most of our readers would admit to a love of the Atlantic coast. Proof that we are not alone in being drawn to the beaches and harbors that border our towns is the summer influx of visitors who travel miles to share our way of life. Perhaps that's why the SHYC Cookbook offers recipes from club members who bring with them favorites in their part of the country, offering such delights as Kentucky Pecan Pie, Mississippi Mud Surprise, Sandwiches Alsatian, Jackson Square Crab Salad, Bailey's Hot Fudge Sauce, Key Lime Pie, Mud Pie, Chicken Casserole—California Style and Deep Southern Fried Chicken. There's much more, but what summer guest could resist these

COLORADO PRALINE COOKIES

1 box graham crackers
1/2 lb. butter
1 c. firmly packed light brown sugar
1 c. pecans, chopped
1 tsp. salt
1½ oz. semi-sweet chocolate, melted and cooled

Preheat oven to 350. Arrange crackers in one layer in a buttered jelly roll pan approx. 15x12x1½", close together, but not overlapping. In a small sauce pan, melt butter and brown sugar and boil for 1 min. Add pecans, salt and boil for 1 min. more. Pour this mixture over crax as evenly as possible. Bake 10 min. and remove from oven. Cool slightly and cut into squares while hot, when the praline is still soft, but not too runny. Before removing squares to cooling racks, drizzle the chocolate evenly over the top. If praline sets too quickly, put pan back into oven for a minute to soften.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

Before the bluefish come in to local waters there is a lull in the saltwater fishing action. Now is the time to look for "fluke," the forgotten summer fish. These large flounder-type fish frequent the outer sand bars at the mouth of most bays and harbors from Provincetown north to Scituate. Many fish will be in the 5 to 10 lb. class and a few will top 15 to 20 lbs.

Fluke will readily hit a seamworm hooked behind bright silver spinner blades. Drift your boat over the sand flats with the wind and let this tempting morsel bump along the sand and just off the bottom. A medium action 8' spinning rod or a 6' to 6½' boat rod with monufilament line 12 to 20 lb. test is a good combination for this type of fishing.

Fluke make delicious eating and are as tasty as flounder when baked, broiled or fried.

An occasional bonus to this type of fishing is that striped bass also like this offering and over the years I have seen many bass hit this rig when nothing else would catch them.

Another favorite bait for fluke is a strip of clam or a live swimming chub, hooked the same way behind a silver spinner. A 1½ oz. Hopkins lure trolled slowly over the sand flats will also produce some nice action when fish are feeding.

Fluke have small rows of sharp teeth so be careful with those fingers when removing the hook and keep those fish on ice until ready for cooking as summer heat can spoil even the freshest of fish quickly.

Creation of the classic clambake—Barlow style

By Jeff Giles

Robert Barlow has had the same summer job for twenty-two years. Somewhere, on a tiny wooded spot of ground sloping down toward Marshfield's Cove Creek, he masterminds it night and day.

With his lawn scattered with giant red and white tablecloths and his trees criss-crossed with a couple dozen netted nylon bags strung up on drying lines, he has no ordinary job and no ordinary summer.

Robert Barlow caters clambakes.

A former Biology teacher at Scituate High School, founder of the Massachusett's Lobstermen's Association and the Marshfield Flying Club, Barlow has never been one to settle down. When he retired eight years ago, however, he dedicated himself wholeheartedly to the business of clambaking — a business which would quickly become much more than ever he could have expected.

Now morning smells a little different at the Barlow house. It smells like 50 pounds of gurgling clams, like 30 gallons of chowder buddling away in teflon pots. With his wife Melody and his right-hand-man John Putnam cooking, husking, and packing through the early hours, Bob Barlow and his crew are ready for another bake.

John Putnam, science teacher and wresting coach at Marshfield High, pulls shut the heavy steel doors of the Barlow truck and laughs. "So much for the prelims," he says. "Now for the main event."

Cove Creek Lane is just barely big enough to let Barlow's giant six-wheeled truck squeeze through. As the tires grind down on the graveled road, the trees and bushes scrape crazily at the tall, red and white sides that read: "Clambakes by Bob Barlow."

As he drives, Barlow alternates between a pipe, a mug of coffee, and the wheel. He smiles warmly and genuinely when he speaks of his twenty year old hobby. "I supervise every bake," he says. "That's how I've maintained quality through the years. I go a little further, even when it costs me. I like to see the smiles on the faces."

John Putnam shares his sentiment. "One of the things that make this job enjoyable is the appreciation you get for the effort you put out, the product you produce. A Bob Barlow clambake — it's a nice affair.

He takes pride in it and he encourages his workers to share that pride."

Slowly, cradling babies or beer, the guests arrive. The tables are set up; inside the 55 gallon drums, the racks of lobsters, clams, and corn ride slowly up and down. Barlow invented the cooking system himself. The seaweed adds a sweet, rather than bitter flavor and "the lobster tastes like lobster and the clams taste like clams."

The days of a glowing, tarp-covered pit on the beach are over.

The chowder comes and goes. Seconds. Thirds. Don't-eat-so-much-of-that, the lobster's what I'm waiting for. The drums are pumping smoke like crazy now.

Here we go.

Barlow spills a bag of lobsters out onto the table. The guests are falling all over themselves in line. One steak, two lobsters, some clams, and a hamburger for my kid. God, it smells great, just great, Mr. Barlow.

The Barlows' season generally runs from June 7 to October 12. Then it's over — all of it. "You expect it's going to start and you expect it's going to end," says Bob. "You have a lot of fun at the first bake of the season and by the last you're saying 'Well, I'm glad that's that."

These past few years, the Barlows have traded in fishing trips to Nova Scotia for a few vacation weeks in Hawaii. They spend their winter months winding down and recuperating.

Bob Barlow sits back into a green and white lawn chair as the watermelon floats through the crowd. John Putnam pulls the barrels back up into the truck. The gas goes off. Melody Barlow smiles and wipes a table down.

What would Robert Barlow be doing if there were no clambakes? "Maybe working in my office," he says then stops to think. "Maybe swimming in the pool."

And what will he be doing when there are no more clambakes? He smiles, taps his pipe against the chair, and stares out at his young son Alan who is passing a bowl of chips around.

"Can't give away all my secrets you know."

productions.

Planned are a December performance of the traditional favorite "Cinderella" in the unique form of an English "panto" or pantomime show, especially adapted for performance by the Dramatic Club.

Directing this Christmas season special will be Judy Holmes, the eminent artistic director of Hingham's Elizabethan Companie, who directed the recent Cohasset Town Hall presentation of "Dangerous Corner."

For its second major production of the coming season the Dramatic Club has chosen the modern human comedy "Mornings At Seven," directed by Cohasset's Denise Ripley, and for its next spring's show the contemporary farce "Scapino," an adaptation of an original comedy by Moliere, will be directed by Ellen Kelly. She recently directed the modern play "Scenes From American Life" for the Dramatic Club.

Play dates for the Dramatic Club's 1984-85 productions will be announced. This coming season's club officers are: President, Julia Jordan; Vice President, David Wadsworth; Treasurer, Charles Wheelwright, all of Cohasset; and Secretary, Jan Higbee of Hingham.

In presenting this slate of fine dramatic shows, Cohasset's community theater continues to actively pursue its primary artistic and cultural goals of presenting "Worthwhile shows for dramatic, charitable and social benefit," the purpose first defined by the club's founding members in 1921.

Historical Museums Open

The Cohasset Historical Society's two museums located on Elm Street, Cohasset Center, now are open for the summer season. The Captain John Wilson House and the Maritime Museum will remain open to the public through the end of September.

Hours are 1:30 to 4:30 each afternoon except Mondays. Admission by donation is 75¢ per building for adults, 25¢ per building for children from six to 12 years of age. Society members and their guests are admitted without charge.

The Capt. Wilson House is an 1810 dwelling originally owned by one of Cohasset's numerous seafaring families and contains the Society's collection of early home furnishings, kitchenware, children's toys and a representative selection of local artwork. Most of the historical items on display have been given from old homes of Cohasset and represent typical examples of their type from the early or mid-19th century.

Adjacent to the Capt. Wilson House is the Maritime Museum, an 18th century ship's chandlery now housing an extensive collection of artifacts, documents, prints and paintings relating to Cohasset's seafaring past. Relics salvaged from shipwrecks, models of full-rigged ships, equipment used by Cohasset's mackerel schooner fleets and Deep Sea Captains are on display, and the unique story of the building of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse is told in models, pictures and relics.

The Maritime Museum also holds a general historical collection relating to Cohasset's early years. A third Historical Society building, the 1823 Caleb Lothrop House, on Summer Street, serves as headquarters for the Society, contains the Society's extensive archives and library as well as early and mid-19th century home furnishings and artwork. The Lothrop House is available for meetings and wedding receptions, also is open by appointment. For further information about Cohasset Historical Society please call 383-0773 or 383-6930.

Drama workshop

The Cohasset Drama Workshop has announced the cast for its first summer production in two years, Uncommon Women and Others by Wendy Wasserstein. This alternately comic and serious play about a group of women both during their senior year at Mount Holyoke College and six years later has been presented in New York and Boston, as well as on PBS. A greatly-abridged version was performed by members of the Drama Workshop at the finals of the Massachusetts Drama Festival in 1982. This full-length production of the work will be presented in arena style at Cohasset High School July 21, 27, and 28 at 8 p.m.

As with other summer presentations of the Drama Workshop, Uncommon Women will provide a showcase for the talents of graduates of the Cohasset High School theatre program and enables current students to learn from them.

Appearing as Rita will be Meri Fink, a senior at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. While a student at Cohasset High School she won acting awards at both the Massachusetts and New England theatre competitions for her performance in Story Theatre.

Two other veterans of that prize-winning play joining in Uncommon Women are Disa Pratt, a graduate of Simmons College, as Kate, and James Vivian, a graduate of Gordon College.

Returning for the full-length production of the show are three veterans of the state drama festival cast of Uncommon Women. Michelle Shea, a junior at the University of New Hampshire, will recreate the role of Holly, while Maureen Buckley, a sophomore at Bates College, will play Samantha, and Nancy Walls, who will enter Boston College this fall, will portray Muffet. Walls was honored as one of the ten outstanding performers at this years state drama festival for her work in Chinamen.

Rounding out the cast are Alexandra Mullen, a graduate student at Columbia University, as Mrs. Plumm; Joanna Fone, a sophomore at Trinity College, as Leilah; and Sarah Muir, an early graduate of CHS, as Carter. Cohasset High School junior Jacqui Fahey will appear as Susie Friend.

Ron Emmons, Cohasset High School Director of Dramatic Arts, is staging Uncommon Women in an intimate style that will keep all audience members within six feet of the performing area and seated on three sides of the action. To accommodate this production style, seating is being limited to only fifty seats per performance.

Tickets should be purchased early because of the seating limitation. Reservations may be made by calling 383-1993. The show is not recommended for pre-high school age young people.

A moving experience . . .

By Lois Martin

The difference between a surmountable task and an insurmountable one is friends.

Because I can tell you for certain that a month ago I would have sworn that moving from one house to another would have taken me three days. I had viewed myself as hitching down the road pulling one cardboard box at a time until I'd worked myself up to the washing machine. I saw myself as being alone in the awesome endeavor because, after all, who wants to help move.

If they didn't want to help, they did a credible job of disguising that disinterest. I knew I'd have two sons at full growth and strength to lift. Still . . . after 13 years in one spot, there was all that to shift, never mind a cat and a dog from whom I'd kept the move a se[illegible]t.

PATCHES

In the couple months before, I'd grown obs[illegible] by boxes. I couldn't get enough of them. Ev[illegible]ywhere I went I'd spot a box that looked just right to hold books, or clothes or pots and pans. And I spent all my time packing and marking and stacking until, the night before the move, the kitchen table was surrounded by semblances of my effort.

I had done all the little things that are important in closing out a relationship with a house. One cannot move on, literally or figuratively until she has fully completed an encounter so long and so meaningful as that in a home.

So I had sat in the living room and stared, allowing old echoes to surface, enjoying them, appreciating them as one does a scrapbook. I'd sat out back and marked in my mind the leaning of certain branches toward this window or that, the hydrangea's growth since I first saw it and the rhubarb given to me by dear old Mrs. Mitchell before she died.

All that done, I got up Saturday morning early, finishing the odds and ends of stashing my toothbrush so that I could find that by the end of that full day. And within an hour's time the 'packers,' the movers who could make the professional shifters take notice, were at work.

There were, I think, four trucks, that many and more men and women at the old house and the new doing and then undoing.

While the old broom swept away the remnants of my home on Forest Street, the new regime was set in order at what I like to call Shady Lane, though it's technically Ridge Road. I had determined to stay 'til the door was locked on a freshly and finally washed floor . . . waiting for new owners, nice people from the city.

That ceremony was completed and I, foolish though it will seem to some while understandable to others, thanked that fine house for being a wonderful home to me and my family.

The cat was nowhere to be seen. The dog was in the car knowing she was headed somewhere. Rain was threatening and the mighty moving firm of Friendship had cleared the house and the possessions by 10:30 a.m. Over at Shady (Ridge) the pots and pans were already in place. The placement of living room furniture was being vociferously debated by about five women and all but one sheet had been found for the beds.

Miracle. Simply a miracle what people accomplish. Here I'd feared my singular undertaking. That was apparently unnecessary. I did nothing alone that day.

And if they brought stouthearted willingness that was wondrous, they brought something else twice as endearing—smartmouthed banter and camaraderie . . . "What idiot put the couch there?" demanded one interior decorator. And shortly thereafter a man arrived with a turkey and trimmings which were consumed with a gusto that matched the move.

I think I know a lot about people, what we're like, really do. But the most exciting knowledge that I have is of how much I don't know, what I can learn.

It was a moving experience for me, in every way. I'm still new there, still uncertain of where everything is, and that includes me.

But on this I'm clear. I have in my work and in my life, a unique and precious opportunity to see the best of people. That privilege consistently warms, heartens, comforts and inspires me.

For that I am grateful. And for my family and friends who moved me to another of life's beginnings, I have only my respectful and loving thanks.

Drop by if you're in the neighborhood. I found the cat and once I come across the teakettle, I'll be entirely settled.

The 16th annual Heritage Days, sponsored by the Scituate Chamber of Commerce to honor the founders of the town in 1636, will be held Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 10, 11 and 12.

Co-chairmen are Rudolph Mitchell and Robert Magner, and the Chamber president is Bob Drew.

The crafts fair will be held Saturday, Aug. 11. Reserved tables will be set up along the center of Front Street which, with the town's permission, will be closed to vehicular traffic between the two entrances to Cole Parkway and Scituate Harbor.

Information and applications for tables may be obtained from the chamber's clerk, Ann Cusick, P.O. Box 175, North Scituate 02060 or by calling her at 545-9338.

Front Street merchants will hold sidewalk sales all day Saturday and Sunday afternoon.

A juried photography show will be held Aug. 11 and 12 at St. Mary's Church Hall. Photographers interested in submitting their work may obtain applications from Rudolph Mitchell, 93 Maple Street 02066 or by calling him at 545-2137.

Other Aug. 11 events will include a seafood festival, a visit by the Red Cross bloodmobile, entertainment, and special events, such as children's races.

The three-day event opens Friday afternoon with ceremonies at Town Pier and the Chamber's new tourist information booth and a concert by the Satuit Band at the Cole Parkway bandstand Friday evening.

Heritage Days
August 10-12

On the final day, there will be a boat parade from the outer Harbor to Town Pier, followed by the award of prizes and the drawing of the names of the holders of three lucky sponsor tickets. Sponsor tickets are available from members of the Chamber.

Assisting Mitchell and Magner in planning for Heritage Days are: James Goddard, bloodmobile; Vincent Cahill, boat parade; Judy Rossman, crafts show; James Callanan, entertainment; Frank Mirarchi, seafood festival; Dennis Aresta, woodcarving; and Norma Childress and Jeannette Mullen, sponsor tickets; Joan O'Brien, treasurer; and Mila Dixon, publicity.

Crafts Tables Available

Reservations for tables to be set up in the center of Front Street between Beal Street and Otis Place Saturday, Aug. 11, as part of the townwide observance of Heritage Days, are now available.

Rudolph Mitchell, Heritage Days Chairman said the crafts table is sponsored by the Scituate Chamber of Commerce and priorities have been established for the assignment of the tables.

They are: Scituate merchants, first; non-profit organizations, second, and, finally, juried crafters.

Reservations may be made by calling Mitchell at 545-2137 or Ann Cusick,chamber secretary, at 545-9338.

With the approval of selectmen, Front Street will be turned into a mini-pedestrian mall to promote increased activity in the harbor business district from mid-morning to late afternoon.

Book donations needed by library

The 12th annual used book sale sponsored by the Friends of the Scituate Town Library for Heritage Days is scheduled for Saturday, Aug. 11, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Library on Branch Street.

Persons who would like to volunteer to assist in culling, sorting, carrying boxes of books and setting up the sale, as well as working on the day, are urged to come to the library (downstairs) Monday or Tuesday morning at 9 a.m. for training.

During the past two weeks a number of volunteers have started working, digging into a mammoth pile of volumes donated by persons who have come to depend on the annual sale as a way of passing books along from their own libraries and purchasing more "for a song."

This year's sale is again being managed by a committee of Friends and friends. Already at work are Mary B. Moore, Friends president for the past two years; Joan Heffernan, incoming president; Rose Zoob, a past president with continuing interest in the huge fundraiser ($2,900 in 1983); and Mary Mealy, who for the fourth year is in charge of sale organization and arrangements.

Shirley Anderson is responsible for Better Books and Charlotte Parsons is assisting with publicity and recruitment.

Story Lady Marion Gunn, and former Childrens Librarian Dorothy Vergobbe are preparing childrens books for sale.

Others volunteering include Marguerite White, Friends membership chairman, Kay Beebe, Jane Versoy, former Library staffer Phoebe Mulligan and Viola Serafini.

Good, clean books, both paperbacks and hardcovers, are sorely needed. Special books — oldies but goodies and coffee table type volumes — are particularly desirable. This year the sale will again have a collection of records, puzzles (complete, please) and games.

Questions may be reffered to the library, to Mary B. Moore (545-0191), Mary Mealy (545-3203) or Charlotte Parsons (545-2385). All contributions should reach the library by August 1.

Juried Heritage Days photography show

South Shore area amateur photographers are invited to exhibit their work in the Juried Photography Show to be held Aug. 11 and 12 as part of the town-wide observance of Heritage Days, sponsored by the Scituate Chamber of Commerce.

There will also be a special contest for the best vertical photo of a Scituate scene to be published on the cover of the next edition of the "Little Yellow Pages Phone Book."

The Chamber of Commerce will present plaques to the winners in both the juried and public judging while the H.A. Manning Co., publishers of the little telephone directory, will present a plaque to the winner of the special contest. The awards will be made Aug. 12 following the Boat Parade.

All entires must be delivered to Scituate photographer Rudolph Mitchell, co-chairman of Heritage Days, at his home, 93 Maple Street, by Aug. 4 and picked up there by Aug. 31. Additional information pertaining to applications and rules may be obtained by calling him at 545-2137.

On the first day of the exhibit, the public will vote for their favorites. Following Heritage Days, the award-winning photos will be hung for one week at the Scituate Federal Savings Bank.

The juried judging and the judging in the special contest will be at G.A.R. Hall on Country Way, near First Parish Road, Aug. 5 from 9 a.m. to noon. The public is welcome.

Amateur photographers regardless of age may submit any number of unframed black and white or color prints for the Juried Show and color prints only for the special contest. The entry fee is $2 per print.

The deadline for entries in the two competitions is Aug. 4. All entries will be exhibited at St. Mary's Hall, Scituate Harbor, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Aug. 22 and from noon to 3 p.m. Aug. 12.

Residence for retarded adults proposed by state

By Jane Lane

Plans are underway for the construction of a facility to house eight mentally retarded adults on state-owned property off Route 3A.

The Coastal Area Office of the Department of Mental Health (DMH) was scheduled to present details of the plans to selectmen Wednesday night. The residence will be located on an acre of land on Crocker Street.

Along with Ted Lang, acting area director for DMH, Cohasset resident Maria Plante has been in the forefront of the effort to secure such a residence within the town.

The land was formerly owned by the state Department of Public Works, and was recently transferred to the ownership of DMH. According to Lang, the site was selected after a six month search. It was the only publically-owned land that was workable to fit the department's needs for development, Lang said.

The Intermediate Care Facility (ICF/MR) will house eight mentally retarded adults aged 25 to 40, and four staff members who will remain on the site 24-hours a day. These mentally retarded individuals need constant supervision and instruction, according to Plante, with the hope that they will become more self sufficient and capable of functioning on their own. As time passes, DMH hopes to release the residents from the facility and bring in new clients on a revolving basis.

The individuals to be housed within the Crocker Street facility will include two residents of Cohasset who are currently in the Walter Fernald School, and six others from surrounding towns. According to Plante, who has been active in the pursuit of rights for the mentally retarded in behalf of her son, Peter, it cost the state about $60,000 per year to house one individual in an institution. The cost of the ICF/MR is considerably less, with better results, she added.

"This facility is long overdue," she said. "Cohasset is the only town in this area without DMH property. This is Cohasset's chance to work and help these people."

Plante said the individuals assisted through this program are too old to have received the benefits of Chapter 766 or Early Intervention, both federally-funded programs that mainstream retarded and handicapped persons in the public education system. They

Cutback not a disaster

Cohasset will not be in bad financial shape despite Governor Michael Dukakis' cutback of local aid funding. According to Executive Secretary Mark Lanza, the town never anticipated the money and will therefore not feel the impact of its loss.

The reduction of local aid by the Governor resulted in a decrease of $47,600 from the state government. That is far less dramatic than most other South Shore towns.

But Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray said Monday she will be in the forefront of a bipartisan effort to override the Governor's budget reduction at an August 6 State House hearing. Saying she was "extremely disappointed" with the Governor's budget slashing, Murray added she was confident there would be enough votes to override the budget which was signed into effect.

"I supported the original budget," she said Monday. "I support any type of local aid and I feel there is enough surplus within the budget and far more revenues coming into the state to support more local aid to our cities and towns."

Lanza explained that when budget projections were compiled last spring for town meeting, no state aid was estimated and included in the computations. "We assume the worse and hope for the best. We assume charges will go up, revenues will remain the same. We never count on something as tenuous as state aid," he added.

The good news, he said, is that according to the state's cherry sheet issued in March, Cohasset will receive $490,000 in state aid, an increase of $135-,322 over last year.

"The extra $47,600 would have been nice," he said. "It would have been perfect for the fall town meeting to appropriate money for updating the town's computer system. We could have used the extra money, but it's no disaster that we don't have it."

School Supt. Eugene Crowell said he does not yet know how the financial reduction will affect the school system. "Until we find out exactly what we will receive we'll be holding our breath," he said.

Rep. Frank Hynes (Scituate, Marshfield) explained that despite the Governor's budget splicing, the overall local aid increase is substantial. The legislature's removal of the amount of money appropriated to communities through the state lottery resulted in a 26 percent increase in local aid in FY 1985. And the $17.8 million awarded to communities outside the M.D.C. sewer district in the next three fiscal years will conclude in additional local aid to area towns, he said.

The Marshfield Democrat said he was pleased overall with the Governor's budget and would not support an override attempt.

Henry Dormitzer brings dreams to reality

By Dave Warren

"I'm not the kind of person who can just sit around rocking in a rocking chair. That doesn't intrigue me."

Henry Dormitzer's views on retirement have been a boon to us all. While most people won't recognize his name, you won't find many who haven't been dazzled by the splendor and majesty of the Tall Ships he brought to our waters in 1976.

And the realization of a more tangible yet equally thrilling idea of his, the building of the 127-foot sailing vessel The Spirit of Massachusetts, will be a source of joy and adventure for thousands for many years to come.

For many years Dormitzer benefitted from his own ingenuity and drive to bring his ideas into existence. The company he started in 1932, Electro Powerpacs Corp. of Cambridge, continues to thrive.

Comfortably settled in Cohasset, Dormitzer has concentrated his energies on his love for the sea in his later years, with the citizens of Massachusetts as his beneficiaries.

Health Board Notice

Due to the increase in the number of plans requiring review by the Board of Health, it has become necessary to modify the time requirements for plan submissions.

In order to have a plan reviewed by the Board at their regularly scheduled meeting (first and third Monday of the month), the plan must be received in the Board of Health office by 12:00, two weeks prior to the meeting.

Any plans received after 12:00 noon will not be reviewed at the next meeting. Any questions about this policy, effective at the time of this printing, should be referred to the Board of Health office at 383-1664.

Garage committee status

The chairman of the Town Garage Committee wrote this week to selectmen, stating that a formal report of the committee's findings will be finalized this fall.

The committee has adjourned for the remainder of the summer, with the next scheduled meeting to be held Sept. 11 at 8 p m. in Town Hall.

According to Ken Wilcox, chairman of the study committee, they have held six meeting and have pursued many angles. A final step taken by the committee will be to develop a list of the available sites for a municipal garage and to list the pros and cons of owning such a facility.

Wetlands inspection

Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous forwarded a letter to the Conservation Commission, requesting a review of a possible wetlands violation at the Margin Street property owned by Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray.

Although commission members doubt the land is currently classified as wetlands, they will inspect the property.

According to commission member Pat Buckley, Rep. Murray, as a personal favor to the Water Dept., has allowed the town to park heavy equipment vehicles on her property during the Atlantic Avenue reconstruction. Dirt and gravel, which was dug up during the construction, has also been stored on her land. Eliopolous wanted the situation inspected to ensure that any wetlands are not being inproperly filled with the storage material.

Buckley said she doubted whether the Margin Street property can currently be classified as wetlands, and she further doubted whether any material had actually be used as fill.

Intramunicipal agreement

Sewer Commission chairman Charles DeSantis said town counsel has finished his review of Cohasset's proposed intramunicipal agreement with Hull. The document has been forwarded to Hull for examination by town counsel there.

This is just the start of negotiations between the two towns, DeSantis said.

Meanwhile, DeSantis and sewer commission member Ted Guild were scheduled to meet with the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering commissioner to discuss grant funding for the proposed Ward Engineering sewer plan. DeSantis said if the town is given a "green light" for funding, then the plan will speed ahead.

If the plan is shot down by DEQE officials for funding, the decision will be immediately appealed to the EPA. But, if indications are that some portions of the plan will be funded, and some won't, DeSantis said the sewer commissioners will have to rethink their strategy.

Swimming pool problem

Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous told the Health Board Monday night that while she was inspecting kitchen facilities at Kimball's By The Sea, she saw the pool being utilized without a proper Board of Health permit.

She immediately forwarded a letter to the owners' attorney, Charles Humphreys, but no reply has been received. In the meantime, the Board of Health has forwarded the agent's complaint to town counsel.

Library trustee and sewer commissioner sought

Selectmen are looking for applicants to vacated seats on the Library Trustees and the Sewer Commission.

Those interested in serving as a library trustee should submit their applications to the trustees by Aug. 11.

Residents interested in serving on the sewer commission are asked to notify the commission as soon as possible, Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said. Applicants will be interviewed by the commission and selectmen in the next few weeks.

Selectmen and the respective boards will make the appointments which will be effective until the next town election.

Emergency 911 coming in 1986

Selectmen said last week the town may be connected to a 911 emergency phone number by 1986.

The board and Executive Secretary Mark Lanza are currently working with New England Telephone Company to establish an emergency phone number which ties into the police and fire departments and the ambulance calls simultaneously.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley and Police Chief Joseph Kealey said they have not yet been consulted. Dooley said he supports the idea.

Kealey said, "I don't really know where it's going to be; I presume it'll be in the police station. There may be a civilian dispatcher."

According to a communication from N.E. Telephone, the 911 system may be purchased or leased from the company. The monthly cost for the line is $15.70 per line or $47.11 per month. The town must rent or buy a minimum of three lines. An installation charge would be $220.70. The earliest date of installation within police headquarters, would be the summer of 1986, according to the phone company.

Appointment delay

Selectmen took no action last week on the recent resignation of Joseph Gwinn from the Sewer Commission.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said when someone resigns from a town board, he should file his resignation with the town clerk. However, because members of town boards are elected by the voters, it is not the selectmen's position to accept a resignation, he said.

Gwinn said he resigned because of philosophical differences with the Ward Engineering Plan. It has been contention for the past three years that a central sewer plan, as proposed by Metcalf and Eddy would be more fundable by the state and federal government than an innovative system as recommended by Ward Engineering. Gwinn has fought to convince the town to comply with the Metcalf and Eddy report which suggests the town construct a sewer plant.

License revocation

Selectmen voted unanimously to revoke the Greenhouse Restaurant's all alcoholic common victualer's license last week. The restaurant in Cohasset Village has been closed for more than a month.

Accident investigation continues

The state Department of Marine and Recreation Vehicles is still investigating Cohasset's first boating fatality which occurred off Bassing Beach Saturday afternoon.

Special Officer John Dicecca, who happened to be at the scene at the time of the accident, is continuing his investigation. Dicecca, a field officer who was checking unregistered boats along Cohasset Harbor, was one of the first to assist and administer first aid at the scene.

Despite efforts by Dicecca and Cohasset EMT's, James Ryan, 20, of Sawmill Lane in Medfield, was pronounced dead at South Shore Hospital at 3:58 p.m. Saturday.

According to Cohasset police, Ryan was aboard a 15-foot Boston Whaler owned by William Weeks Sr. The outboard boat was being operated by Stephen Cavanaugh of Cohasset, while his brother William was waterskiing behind the boat.

Ryan, who was sitting on the right side of the boat's bow, was thrown into the water off Bassing Beach when the boat turned abrubtly. The operator then veered to the left to avoid Ryan in the water.

The propeller struck Ryan as the boat turned sharply to the left, slashing his neck and head. The man was taken aboard the boat and brought into Cohasset Yacht Club where EMT's were summoned.

Officer Dicecca, who was nearby and assisted Ryan onto the Boston Whaler, administered first aid. EMT's took over the process once the man was brought to the club.

Ryan was transported by ambulance to the South Shore Hospital where he died about one hour later.

Drama Workshop

"Uncommon Women and Others," a play by Wendy Wasserstein, will be presented by the Cohasset Drama Workshop July 21, 27 and 28 at 8:30 p.m. on the stage of Cohasset High School.

This striking and exceptional first play was presented by New York's renowned Phoenix Theatre, and then selected for the PBS "Theatre in America" series on nationwide television.

Annual garden tour mixes design and talent

By Elisabeth Gorfinkle

After visiting seven gardens on the South Shore Natural Science Center's annual tour last week, a person wouldn't say, "If you've seen one, you've seen them all." Each garden reflects a unique mix of talent and design sense.

But, be it herbal, vegetable, Japanese or flower, all successful gardens take skill, endless work and passionate devotion to create, said tour committee member Lavalie Hoss of the Rockland Garden Club. She and two other women took over the responsibility of organizing the tour from the center for the first time this year.

Hoss was kind enough to take this reporter on a preview of the gardens last Tuesday. The formal tour, called "Through the Garden Gate," took place on the following day. Visitors traced the route with marked maps and were greeted by a hostess at each destination. The center's staff also invited people to enjoy their herb and weed gardens and served a light lunch.

Turn-of-the-Century Victorian home, Hastie garden, Scituate

Down a long gravel road through an oak and pine wood is the Hasties' 4.5 acre estate on top of a hill facing the North River.

Doris Hastie calls the huge 1890's converted summer home with long, sloping lawn and an acre-large vegetable garden "just a good old family place."

For the last 30 years the family has grown enough produce to sustain them and friends. The sandy soil, built up with cover crops, grows just about every native fruit and vegetable you could imagine, said Hastie.

"I always freeze enough to last the winter," she said with a smile.

A rarefied experience, Warren garden, Cohasset

When Hope Warren moved into her white Greek revival home more than 50 years ago, the yard was ash and rubble.

The town had blasted the top of the steep hill next to her house to make the road safer for travel. The blast's refuse was dumped on her yard.

Some of that rubble was fashioned into a front wall and stoop that leads to a glassed-in porch filled with plants. The rest was used in stone walls and rock gardens throughout the property.

Lavender grows out of the small front yard's wall and steps. Its flowered spikes, jeweled in bees, give off a pungent aroma that mixes with the scent of creeping thyme crushed underfoot between the side yard's patio bricks.

Mrs. Douglas Fields of the Scituate Garden Club, and her friend, Mrs. Stuart Hanckel, check out the various gardens of the special tour sponsored by the South Shore Natural Science Center.

A huge Chinese scholar tree, surrounded by three kinds of hosta, shades another brick patio and tiny, iron garden furniture. The huge tree's olive-green, arrowhead-sized leaves russle in the breeze like paper chimes.

Warren inspected a single-flowered blue hydrangia thriving in the tree's shade. "I put a branch down and put a brick on it so new hydrangias come up to give to people," she said.

"I love a perfectly planned place. The best thing about gardening is that people who appreciate it get so much out of visiting."

Hoss explained that Warren is legally blind and is assisted by a woman caretaker. But, she can still give the horticultural name of everything growing in her garden.

Many rare shrubs and trees were given to her by the Arnold Arboretum, where she began volunteer work in 1940.

Japanese Garden, O'Toole, Cohasset

Franny O'Toole has brought the elegant simplicity of a Japanese garden to a suburban street in Cohasset. A pagoda in front of a Cape house is the entrance to her creation.

"It seemed that studying the gardening went right along with studying the language," said O'Toole who spent three years in Japan with her family.

The grounds surrounding the 30-year-old Cape house are landscaped in gravel paths, flowers, oriental trees and artifacts. Each tree and plant is set off, yet the entire garden feels harmonious. Some of the Oriental trees are a ginko, a twisted Japanese black pine, a red thread-leaf Japanese maple and a dragon's eye pine.

And, along the street is a raised hill covered with different types of juniper and day lilies.

A rainbow in flowers, Lombard garden, Scituate

Behind a small, white 264-year-old Cape house Kay Lombard and her daughter Joan tend two acres of multi-colored perennials and two vegetable gardens.

Mrs. Lombard, 85, said it took 35 years to groom 14 flower beds, a cutting garden, a nursery and two vegetable patches. Her daughter has been working steadily with her for the last five of those years.

The garden is inspired by the books of the late English landscape artist Gertrude Jeckyll, said Mrs. Lombard. "I can't paint so I just make pictures with flowers. I want the colors of the flowers to blend."

The spacious lawn that meanders from the road back to the woods shimmers with long flower beds.

A large lily pond, full of fat goldfish, is next to the house's patio and greenhouse. Nearby, a shaded area protects the greenhouse's winter inhabitants.

have resided in institutions most or all of their lives and the state is attempting to free them of that severe restriction, she noted.

The residence will be a replica of the facility located on the grounds of the Paul Dever School. John Sharratt is the architect of the building which will include four bedrooms, a laundry and kitchen, a dining area and bathroom, and a separate area for staff members.

Construction of the facility is slated to begin in January, 1985, with a completion date of August. Full occupancy is expected in December, 1985. The program will be operated by a non-profit service provider selected by the Coastal Area Office through a competitive bidding process. The program's operations will be funded by Medicaid. Thus, Plante explained, there will be no additional cost to the Cohasset taxpayer.

"These people will finally be living in the community where they belong. Hopefully, with help from the state, they will become more self sufficient and become useful, productive citizens. Realistically, we know that three percent of the retarded population needs institutionalization. This is Cohasset's chance to help the people who can be helped," she added.

Lang noted that an advisory committee will be formed to oversee the project. Citizens interested in participating in that committee may contact the Coastal Area Office in Weymouth.

Golf club reps appear before town boards

The Cohasset Golf Club presented plans before two municipal boards this week, outlining renovations to the clubhouse and golf course.

Monday night, representatives of the club described the installation of a grease tank for disposal use by the club's kitchen. Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous ordered a suitably-sized trap be installed underground for kitchen grease disposal.

Eliopolous also informed Health Board members that the club has been operating since the spring without an annual food license. There was some confusion as to when the club representatives should have applied for the license, but the health agent said they must now apply because they are serving food illegally without the permit.

The agent explained to the Health Board members that since she ordered installation of the grease tank, she was at the site to inspect the work. She could not closely observe the completed project and consequently scheduled the hearing before the Board of Health.

Although local regulations state that such a facility may install a 1000 gallon tank, Eliopolous said she would have liked a 1500 gallon capacity cyclinder at the site.

Camillo Spirito, the licensed contractor who installed the tank, said because of surrounding ledge, he could only install a cylindrical tank which holds a volume of about 973 cubic feet.

Board members decided that since the grease trap has not yet been connected, Eliopolous should inspect the site more closely. The health agent must also inspect the kitchen facility before approving a license to prepare food.

At Tuesday night's meeting before the Conservation Commission, club representatives reviewed a drainage project they would like completed off Cedar Street at Turkey Hill Run. The construction would include a concrete flashboard drainage system to ease flooding problems on the seventh and eighth fairways on the golf course property.

Because there was not a quorum of Conservation Commission members present, the committee could only review, not vote on the permit application. The hearing will be continued to Aug. 7 at 8 p.m.

Arthur Munro, an engineer with Perkins Engineering Co. of Hingham, explained the flashboard structure system, designed to help control the flow of water in the brook downstream.

The engineer noted the drainage problem is caused by the perfectly flat contour of the property 1000 feet in length which will not drain properly without a slope.

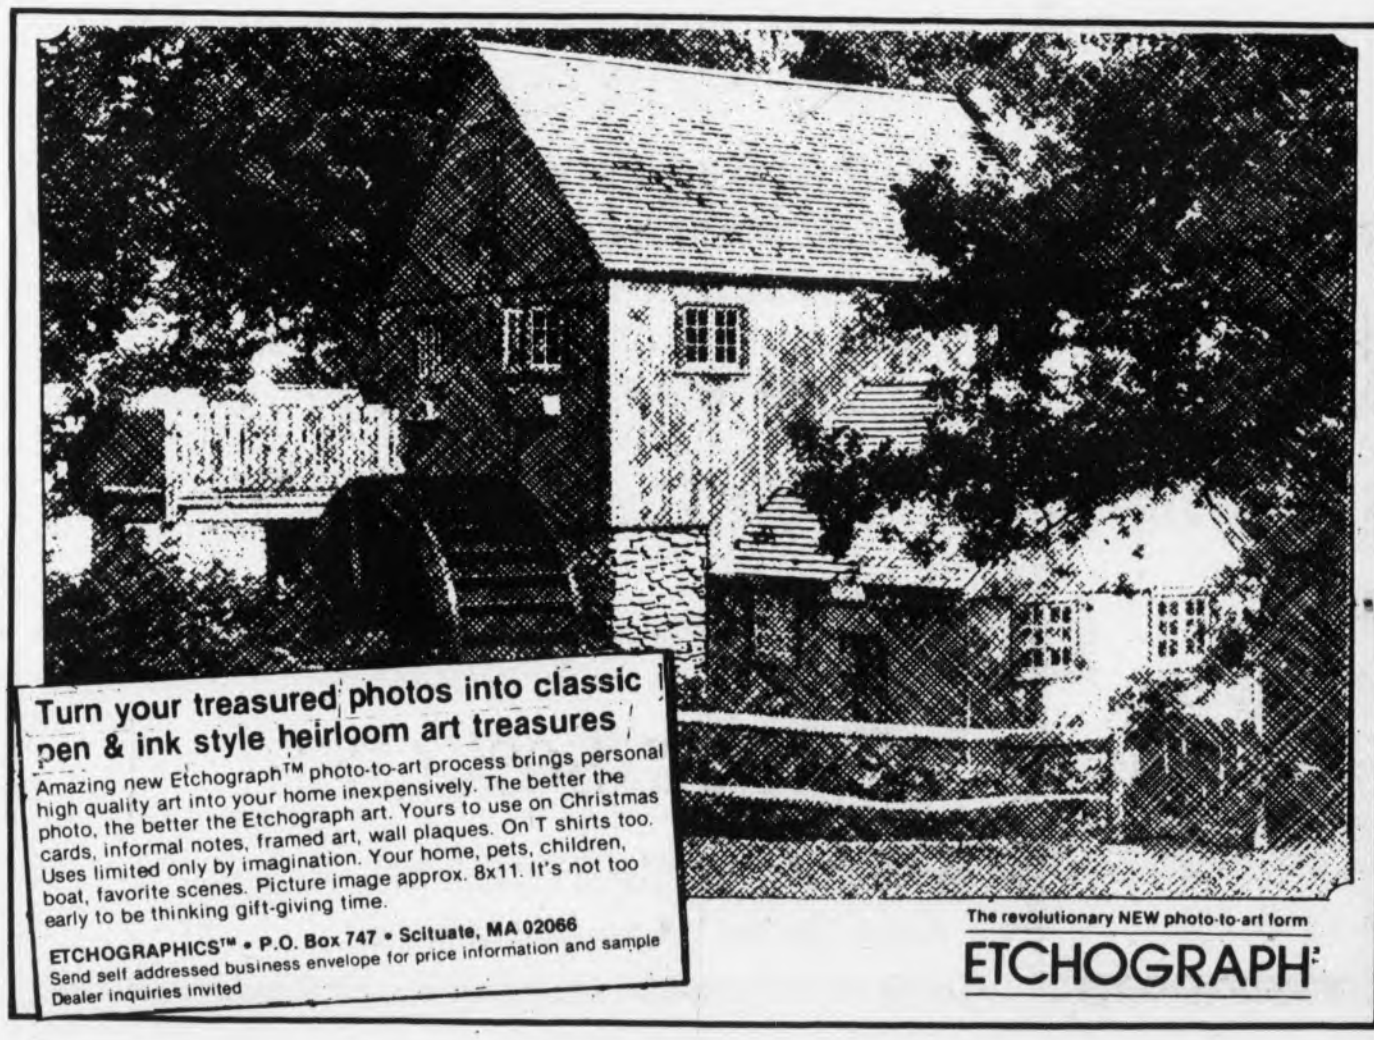
With the control system downstream, the flooding off Cedar Street will be eased. A pump will also be situated at the site, helping to discharge about 5000 gallons of water per minute downstream.

The commission members noted that Health Agent Eliopolous is concerned about the effect such a system will have on abutting private septic systems. Munro denied there would be any effect, saying any residual effect of the discharge would be confined to the brook. The elevation of the land also makes interference with the abutting system impossible, he said.

The commission members asked that elevations of the Cedar Street - Turkey Hill Run property as established by HUD be brought to the next hearing.

The golf club also requested permission to construct a gravel drive on that property for use by equipment containing the pump system. Any filling necessary for the construction would not go above the floodplain elevation, Munro told the commission.

The engineer explained that for years there has been a severe flooding problem on the two fairways, especially during June rainstorms.



Studds Continues Meetings

Marshfield balloon festival

By Lois Martin

Stand by for Marshfield's first balloon festival and a significant one as New England Salutes Maxie Anderson Saturday and Sunday, July 21 and 22.

At least 30 hot air balloons will create an explosion of color in three planned mass ascensions from the high school complex. All this is dependent, of course, on favorable weather that will enable the balloonists and crew to have three launches that weekend, 6 a.m. Saturday and Sunday morning, and 6 p.m. Saturday evening.

Patty Anderson, the widow of Maxie Anderson for whom the festival is held, will be in Marshfield during the entire event. The salute will be to her late husband, his contributions to ballooning and high adventure here and around the world. In addition proceeds will go to the Maxie Anderson International Balloon Museum in Albuquerque, N.M.

The two-day festival promises to be a major one for New England with balloonists from the state coming in full regalia and with chase crews, usually consisting of four people.

People who have had an urge to ride in a hot air balloon have been buying raffle tickets for that opportunity. The tickets will be sold on the spot and between flights. One need only to be present and sporting to cash in on a winning ticket.

They're on sale till then at John N. Flagg Jr.'s construction company on Webster Street, Marshfield; the Green Harbor Marina and at the Mariner.

That Saturday at 9:30 a.m. the Maxie Anderson Road Race will leave from MHS. It is the Recreation Department in conjunction with the festival committee, headed by John Flagg Jr. who'll plan the race and the daylong sports at the high school.

And in the afternoon there will be four hours of live musical entertainment, organized by Yankee Jack (Pittorino). He and his Downeast Pickers lead off the shows with Claire Alosa & Joy, George Teran, Ann Marie & the Country Gold; Gene Caldwell; Deming & Brigham; the Grip with radio personalities Frank Murtagh pf WATD, Bill Hess of WCAV and Bill Raymond of WKKI. This cluster of entertainers has two afternoons of music ready for the festival.

Actually, the weekend fun starts with a band concert in Webster Square from 6 to 9 p.m. The Marc Greel Band offers a jazz performance at that time as the balloonists start rolling into town to be ready for the festival. That will be Friday, July 20.

Throughout Saturday and Sunday morning balloons will be tethered to sell rides for the museum fundraiser, according to the wind factor.

There will be an antique car and truck exhibit, a sky diving exhibition is in the works, Ultra-lites will be there along with a full offering of Maxie Anderson balloon memorabilia.

There is no admission charge. But a parking donation will be requested for the benefit.

Many families in Marshfield will host the sporting guests. Those who wish to do so may still contact Flagg at 837-3128.

Balloonists will be at MHS at 5 a.m. Space will be set aside for the inflation of the mammoth and colorful balloons. Spectators may wish to bring lawn chairs. Refreshments will be available.

John (Jack) Flagg and his wife Cheryl have been friends of the Andersons and as a result of that acquaintanceship are now balloonists. Marshfield has two such aeronauts in Flagg and Ken Lovell, Flaggship, Loveship, Spaceship.

Maxie Anderson's death last June concluded at 49 the life of a man who had garnered admiration in the field of sports, business and politics. His 1977 attempt to cross the Atlantic in a helium balloon was from Marshfield. That was not an end in itself but a beginning for the 1978 successful crossing. It was the first of his significant records, which include the first trans-continental flight in 1980 with his son Chris and other distance records to follow.

The festival is the response of those who knew him, particularly the Flaggs, to see that New England has its place in the museum since it clearly had a place in his life's adventures.

From Presque Isle, Maine, site of the successful 1978 launch, Dana Lougee, city councilman, will represent his town during the festival.

The goal of the massive project?

"I would like," said Flagg, "for the festival to be a funfilled family weekend with an opportunity to make a sizable donation to Maxie's museum."

It would have been easier, they say, simply to have made a contribution independently to the museum. "But just because of Maxie we wanted to do something special," said Cheryl Flagg.

This will be, if goals are met, "...a chance to say thank you."

And, if the weather gives balloonists a break, it will be a skyful of graceful color in celebration of New England's salute to Maxie Anderson.

around town

☐ Henry and Yvette Rattenbury are sure singing the praises of their two sons, Mark and John, lately and it's no wonder why! John, CHS Class of 1985, recently received the Rensselaer Medal which is given to a High School Junior achievement in math and science. John is attending Rensselaer Polytech Institute in Troy, New York for their summer high school program studying chemistry, which takes place this month.

John's brother, EM2 (SS) Mark Rattenbury recently qualified for his dolphins and sea service ribbon after spending 72 days submerged somewhere in the Atlantic aboard the nuclear submarine USS Lafayette SSBN 616, whose home port is Holy Loch, Scotland. After spending the summer in Cohasset, Mark will return to Holy Loch late in August for his next underwater patrol.

☐ Now, when you see Henry and Yvette, you'll understand the reason for their walking two feet off of the ground and glowing with pride!

☐ This July 22nd marks a special occasion "around town". It will be the fifth summer that Japanese students arrive to spend 4 weeks with Cohasset families. The students are of college age and they spend each morning attending classes on country, language, etc. The students are also able to take a number of field trips during the day. Evenings and weekends are spent with the host families. In the past, it has been shown that the kids show a special interest in the Common and the Beach, in fact poetry and letters have been written about the same! Most of the students are placed, three were still without a home at this writing. If you have an extra room and an extra spot in your heart to give a student a glimpse of family life in Cohasset for four weeks (July 22-Aug. 21), give one of our two coordinators a call. Margo Cheel and Jill Suddath are the two gals in charge of this undertaking this year, give them a call.

☐ Heard great news about Marie Johnston and her latest venture. Marie has opened a new shop at 70 Charles Street in Beacon Hill. It's a Boston shop for English Reproduction Furniture and Custom designed and painted furniture. Marie is still here for all of her Cohasset clients with her Interior Design, she now has an "extra" to be able to offer. A full-time gal runs the shop for Marie, and they invite us all to go visit them. It's in the Old Meeting House at the corner of Mt. Vernon and Charles Street. The furniture should be nifty as it is the best reproduction coming out of England today. The name of the furniture is "William Tillman", and it was written up in House Beautiful this past month. Good luck to Marie in her latest venture.

Julie Thompson frolics with son Ted, 1 1/2, at the Cohasset Town Pool.

☐ The Harold Litchfield family is back home, and a happy bunch indeed. You may remember that Pat Litchfield won a play off on "Wheel of Fortune" last spring, and that "more details would be forthcoming". As planned, the whole family went with Pat to cheer her on, and their efforts paid off handsomely. I won't tell you the exact amount won, that can be part of the fun when it's shown this fall, only that Pat did an outstanding job. When the exact date is announced, I will pass the date along to you, it should be great fun to watch. I haven't seen any fancy new cars or full length mink coats being sported by any family members, so we can safely assume they weren't part of the winnings. Remember when Bob James' daughter, Marsha won the mink coat on the game show years ago? We must be part of a lucky town!

☐ Hunneman & Co., Inc. Better Homes and Gardens announces that Alna Ekberg, a sales associate in the Cohasset office, has achieved a residential sales and listing volume of over two million dollars in the first six months of 1984.

Mrs. Ekberg joined the Cohasset office in November of 1983, bringing with her many years of experienced real estate brokerage on the South Shore. Hunneman's office is located on 17 South Main Street in Cohasset.

☐ Patrick Broderick, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Broderick of Buttonwood Lane recently graduated form State University of New York Maritime College in Fort Schuyler, Bronx N.Y.

☐ Congratulations are in order for the Hon. Patrick J. Hurley who was named "Man of the Year" by the Bar Association of the county of Norfolk. Judge Hurley was recently appointed justice of Wrentham District Court, and has lived in our town since 1971. It's a sure thing that Judge Hurley's wife Cynthia and his three children Carolan, Caitlin, and Patrick are as pleased as punch with this honor!

☐ Tara Volungis of Cohasset is attending College Academy, a three-week summer program for bright youngsters in grades four through eight at Stonehill College. More than 40 courses are offered in this fast-moving highly-competitive program for students who enjoy an academic challenge.

☐ Patrick Broderick, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Broderick of Buttonwood Lane, recently graduated from State University of New York Maritime College in Fort Schuyler, Bronx, N.Y.

☐ Richard Young of 36 Stockbridge St., recently graduated from Stonehill College. He was named to the Dean's List with Highest Honors for the last semester.

☐ Paul Buckley of Cohasset has been invited to pre-season practice sessions with the 1984 University of Maine football team starting Aug. 15. A total of 85 players have been invited to return early to the Orono campus to prepare for the coming campaign.

Paul is a candidate for the offensive gard position.

☐ Scott Robert Benbow and Maryjo Mahoney, both achieved grade point averages of B or better, thus making the Dean's List for the spring semester at the University of Maine at Orono.

☐ Maria Plante has done it again! Maria was the chairman for the 13th annual Ride-A-Bike, sponsored by the Cohasset Teachers Association, and raised a record $4,299. There were 132 riders that participated in the event that was for the benefit of the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens, and the top fund-raiser was Patrick A. Plante Jr., who rode 40 miles and collected $446. Hats off to the Plante family!

☐ Scott Robert Benbow and Maryjo Mahoney, both achieved grade point averages of B or better, thus making the Dean's list for the spring semester at the University of Maine at Orono.

☐ Ginny DeBassio and Tanna Kasperowicz are trying to start a new "club" in Cohasset. They are both avid chess players and want to start a chess club for the summer. They aren't "pros," in fact Tanna just taught Ginny how to play. What they have in mind is a night of chess one day a week, and they are even willing to teach it to interested people! If anyone would like to find out more about the chess club call either Ginny at 383-0210, or Tanna at 383-9115. That way they will be able to judge interest and make a date suitable to all.

☐ Congratulations are in order for George Rabstenjnek, who has been elected to serve as the president of the World Affairs Council of Boston. His post certainly sounds like an interesting and busy one.

☐ That's the news for this week folks. Please take time off the busy summer schedule and let me know what's new at your house....

Vandalism prompts action

The Government Island Study Committee presented selectmen last week with a list of eight suggested measures to maximize the potential of Government Island.

Committee Chairman Hamilton Tewksbury said adding lights, regulatory signs and clearing away the brush would cut down on vandalism and congestion.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said there has been vandalism to the peninsula lately and she thinks lights would help curb future damage to the town-owned property.

"The vandalism to Government Island the past two weeks has been atrocious," she said. "They threw a dumpster into the drink (Cohasset Harbor) twice."

A few granite posts were damaged when someone accidently backed into them, Police Chief Joseph Kealy said Sunday.

Committee member Rocco Laugelle said, "Let's face it. It's got a bad track record up there. People are afraid of parking there at night."

In its memorandum to selectmen, the Government Island study committee said the recreational area off Border Street is "unknown to a large majority of people, badly overgrown and generally in poor condition."

The committee suggested the town clear the entrance on both sides and the perimeter of the lot. The committee recommended railroad ties and rocks line the edges of the parking area next to the brush.

"Right now, no one in his right mind is going to leave a boat there. . . . You feel as though you're in the woods," Tewksbury said.

The committee also suggested expanding the parking by leveling the area where the brush is removed. It recommended installing signs which prohibit parking on the entrance road and prohibit parking without the proper sticker.

Government Island borders the Cohasset Sailing Club. The committee suggested only handicapped parking and loading/unloading be permitted in the parking area near the sailing club.

Installing lights would allow safe parking after dark, the memo said, but the study committee stipulated the lights be positioned so as not to bother abutters.

"If these suggestions are followed, Government Island could be far better utilized," Tewksbury said. "We don't feel a lot of money is necessary to do this."

He said the committee will meet with members of the sailing club and will find out the cost of night lighting.

Selectmen took no action on the report, but agreed with its suggestions. "I think if you make it easier for people to use the parking lot, they'll use it," McArthur said.

Risky Business?
"You have to manage your risks if you want to stay in business," says Philip Mason of the Doran & Mason Insurance Agency, in Whitman.
All businesses involve many risks. With a family business those risks are especially serious. Could yours be wiped out because a risk — one you're not even aware of — isn't covered?
According to Mr. Mason, "The first step in managing your risks is to know what they are." Fire, flood, windstorm, personal injury, and crime are only the most obvious risks. "We know where to look for risks and we can show you the best ways to deal with them."
"Doran & Mason is a large, independent insurance agency. That means we can place your insurance with the companies whose coverages just match your needs, and," Mr. Mason pointed out, "our size makes us important to the companies, so we can really help when you have a claim. It also means that we have a full professional staff to give you expert guidance and energetic service, when you need it."
"We're a family business and we realize how devastating interruption of income and loss of investment can be to the people who depend on it."

A good idea

The state Department of Mental Health has proposed a site off Route 3A as the location for a residence for mentally retarded adults. We think it's a great idea and a superb location.

The DMH has had the tireless assistance and longtime friendship of Maria Plante throughout this proposal. Since her son Peter was born, Maria and her husband Patrick have been strong advocates for the rights of the mentally retarded.

It's not easy subject for her to talk about, but she and her husband must make provisions now for her son's future. Years from now when they are gone, what will happen to their son? At his birth, doctors ordered the parents to abandon their son to an institution - "he'll be nothin but a vegetable" they predicted.

Now Peter, who has won medals at the Special Olympics, is able to swim the length of their backyard pool, and can read and write, is living proof what love and proper care can do for a human being.

"I'd like to have him walk through that doctor's office someday and say - "look, a zuccini can't do this," she defiantly jokes, assuring herself she will indeed accomplish that dream.

But without federally-mandated Early Intervention programs and Chapter 766, Peter would not be as advanced as he is today, she admits. His future without his parents' guidance remains uncertain.

That is why adult residences such as the one proposed on former DPW land on Crocker Road are necessary. All the towns surrounding Cohasset have some type of facility for retarded persons. Cohasset used to have Harmony Hill, but since that was abandoned, there is nothing.

These teen and adult mentally retarded individuals will live and learn in this beautifully-designed home atop the hill, set back in the woods. With a 2-1 student, staff ratio, hopes are high that more individuals will become skilled enough to live "on the outside" without constant supervision.

Maria said it is the state's desire to free these people from continual dependency as they learn to cope in society. As a student becomes progressively advanced, he will be allowed out of the program and be mainstreamed into that misnomer called "the normal world."

Other adults will take the place of the recent "graduates," and thus more and more people will be helped in Cohasset's program. These citizens will become meaningful, productive members of a community.

It will cost Cohasset nothing and we will gain much by extending our welcome to these people. They wish not to become burdens upon society. They desire nothing more special than acceptance.

A crass proposal for Town Hall

To the Editor:

The physical beauty of Cohasset, like that of a handsome person, can't be fully enjoyed unless matched by greatness and nobility of spirit. but what meanness of spirit tolerates continued pollution of its own harbor, abuses environmental authority for its encouragement of the most effective long term solutions to sewage treatment, and would convert its Town Hall auditorium/theatre into office space?

But the crass proposal to convert the Town Hall auditorium to offices has been revived again by the Board of Selectmen who don't seem to have noticed that the Hall is much used not only for Dramatic Club plays, but for dancing classes, church fairs, etc. Although the stage is small, its equipment and lighting facilities are much more versatile than the High School. Only about a dozen people inhabit the current second floor offices — why should an auditorium be lost forever to give them more space, or to bring together a few other town employees now located elsewhere?

True, the auditorium has been degraded by unsightly cables related to polling booths, by penurious painting and maintenance, by all sorts of things that demonstrate a town that doesn't care about itself. The location, tradition, facilities and potential of the auditorium are unique and could not be replaced — or regained once lost — at many times the cost of acquiring office space.

Meanness of spirit feeds on itself and degrades the quality of a person, an organization, a town — even a town as physically attractive as Cohasset. Is there hope of addressing the future with a little less grubby-mindedness than we have been addressing sewerage, office space and other town problems? Can we hope for community leaders that strive for higher standards, rather than weakly reflecting the lowest common denominators?

R.M. Campbell

Another reason for election mix-up

To the Editor:

The April 14th Election 'tie' between Mrs. McArthur and Mrs. Golden was very unfortunate and very expensive for the candidates and the Town.

Yes, there was a small voter turn-out, and both the local and daily press lectured us on that fact. But the real problem (for many candidates) in the April 14th Town Elections was the bullets.

It is possible many individuals went to the polls desiring to vote for only one candidate, although there were two seats in the selectmen's race. However, many others were fearful their particular "first choice" selectmen candidate would not win if they voted their second preference.

It is difficult to provide for every possible contingency, every possible voter fear. But I feel it would be wise for the Government Structure Committee to consider a different election structure for the Town-whereby candidates for a seat on any particular board or committee would "run for" a particular seat-and not as a "gang".

A structure such as the one I have briefly touched upon would help to contain "the bullets" and might well make for a more realistic campaign-for the encumbent and the challenger(s).

Heaven forbid it's another carnival

By Claire McDonough

O.K., world, now it can be told.

The K. of C. Carnival in Scituate is over for another year. I'm glad it was a success. I'm happy for the people who love carnivals. The fireworks are swell. But so far as I'm concerned, the best thing about the carnival is that my kids are old enough so I don't have to take them.

I can stay at home with a book and an air conditioner, and think happy thoughts.

I don't have to spend three or four excruciating hours trying to keep my kids from realizing I'm afraid of heights.

That's right world. I'm terrified of high places.

Look, we all have our foibles, right? Some people can't stand to hear styrofoam squeak. Some people are axe murderers. Some people believe Martians are stealing their socks. I'm afraid of heights.

I wasn't always. One of my most vivid childhood memories is of being spanked for walking (no hands) along the railing of a third story porch in Dorchester. One misstep and I would have plummeted to certain death. I laughed at danger. I was seven years old.

Some time between then and the birth of my first child I had learned the meaning of fear. I didn't look out of windows in tall buildings. Ladders were out of the question. Platform shoes made me dizzy.

I knew, however, that a good mother doesn't pass her neuroses on to her children. Let 'em earn their own, the way we did, right?

I remember taking a group of cub scouts to the very top of the Coast Guard building and having to literally pry my fingers off the railing, all the while laughing gaily for the edification of 12 small boys who were too busy dangling over the edge to pay any attention to me at all.

I don't even want to talk about what happened at Lawson's Tower.

My most terrible memories, however, involve the carnival.

I can still close my eyes and see myself, an arm around a small child on either side of me, gushing, "Isn't this fun? You can see the boats way out on the ocean!"

Then I'd close my eyes and pray for a stable stomach.

At that point I would realize that we were stuck at the top, and I would envision a wait of several days before we could be rescued. And one of my children, one of the small human beings on whom I had lavished my time, my love, and all my worldly goods, would begin to rock the gondola.

"Please, Lord," I would beg, "don't let me be sick. I don't even know the people below us. If You won't keep me from being sick, please let me die. Right here. Don't make me ever have to get off this ride and face those people."

I would smile brightly at my Mad Rockers. "What an adventure! Look at those poor people in the lower cars. They haven't even had a chance to get up high like us. Don't be afraid. I'm sure the nice men will get the ride started again any minute now."

They'd look at me like I had suddenly lost my mind.

"We're not afraid," they would chorus, rocking more wildly. "This is heaven."

I certainly hope it isn't.

Look, Lord, I don't mean to interfere in what clearly isn't my business.

If life is a cabaret, that's O.K. with me.

Just, please, pleas:, please, don't let Heaven turn out to be a carnival.

Murray's memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Recently, State House action centered on an intense lobbying effort by the Mayor of Boston to shepherd through the Legislature a controversial 15 percent parking excise tax bill. Previously, the Mayor signed a budget publicly recognized as being out of balance by $10 million. Thus, the funds needed to make up the $10 million deficit was proposed in the form of this 15 percent property tax increase on all parking facilities.

'BOSTON BILL' AFFECTS EVERYONE

But, this so-called "Boston Bill" affects everyone in every city and town in the Commonwealth. All state, municipal, charitable, non-charitable and commercial parking facilities will be subject to this 15 percent tax where a fee is already charged. This bill would set a dangerous precedent in any community which enacts its provisions.

As we all know, a lot of out-of-town money supports Boston, whether it be from people who work in the city or from people who visit. It's not fair to impose another tax on the people from my communities and every other community in the Commonwealth who have business to do in Boston. I contend that it would drive much of this "lifeblood" money away from Boston.

LOCAL AID REFUSED

The ironic thing about this matter of making up Boston's $10 million deficit is that its entire House representation twice voted almost unanimously against local aid measures which would have allocated to Boston close to $6 million in new additional aid.

One of these provisions was the House Republican sponsored local aid amendment to the budget which provided $31.6 million in additional local aid to every community on a $35 per student basis — $4 million to Boston. Despite the lack of Boston delegation's support, this local aid measure passed the House and is now being considered by the Joint Budget Conference Committee. Nevertheless, Boston legislators who voted repeatedly in lock step against these local aid measures support the parking tax. To me, that is not wise.

Currently, an initial vote on the matter saw the proposed parking tax fail by a small margin. At this writing, the Massachusetts House is reconsidering whether or not to further take up the measure.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

The bluefish are here, better late than not at all. Jumbo blues are providing fast action on Billingsgate Shoals off Wellfleet. Steve Smith and Bill Berry weighed in a hefty 18 lb. fish this past Saturday and had three dozen from 12 to 17 lbs. in the fish box.

Striped bass are in good numbers in the Bay as well and live lining eels on the bottom is producing fish in the 35 to 45 lb. range. Bass to 45 lbs. are in Boston Harbor and are taking pogies trolled around islands.

Fluke have shown up at the sand bars on most river mouths and fish in the 3 to 8 lb. class are not uncommon. Drifting with sea worms is your best bet.

Stick boats and handlers were taking some nice tuna on Stellwagon Bank this past week, but rod and reel fish are few and far between as fish are moving fast feeding on squid and menhaden.

Fresh water fishing has been steady and some nice fish are coming in. Paul Giamarco's 8 lb., 3 oz. bass caught in a Kingston Cranberry Bog Pond tops this weeks' Big Mouth Award. "Nice fish, Paul." Winners of last week's Fresh Water Fishing Derby were:

Adult Division

Large mouth bass: Eric Boyajian, Rhode Island
Pickeral: Don Aldridge
Trout: Greg Cavicchi, Quincy

Junior Division

Large mouth bass: Eric Podblski
Pickeral: John Hommel, Pembroke
Perch: Jeff Picard, Marshfield

Congratulations to all who entered and to the winners who received trophies and fishing tackle prizes.

School Committee briefs . . .

The Cohasset School Committee met Monday night to accept the resignations of several faculty members, and to discuss new appointments.

The committee accepted with regret the resignation of METCO Coordinator, Eleanor White. White has taken the position of Assistant METCO Coordinator for the Belmont Public School System. Interviews for White's replacement will be held Thursday, July 18.

Science teacher, John Mika also resigned from the Cohasset Public School system. Mika accepted a position as Assistant Principal at Scituate High School. Cohasset's Superintendent of Schools, Eugene Crowell, expressed regret at Cohasset's loss, referring to Mika as "...one of the most outstanding teachers here at the high school..."

Both White and Mika expressed their thanks and best wishes to their colleagues in Cohasset.

The School Committee also discussed and approved the appointment of two new faculty members for Cohasset's Public Schools.

Appointments

To replace Guidance Counselor Anne Porter, who has requested a two year leave of absence, the School Committee approved the appointment of Edward J. Leonard. Leonard has six years teaching experience and five years experience as a Guidance Counselor at Sacred Heart High School. Superintendent Crowell mentioned that Leonard is someone he has been impressed with for some time, and that he would be a great asset to Cohasset High School.

The committee also approved the appointment of Jean Free to a position as an elementary school teacher.

School news

Basic skills tests

Concerning the results of the Basic Skills Tests taken by Cohasset's Junior High School students, the School Committee members seemed pleased. Assistant to Superintendent, Steven Hart, announced that over ninety-percent of Cohasset's students passed the test. According to Hart, the results are "encouraging", and they "...indicate that emphasis is being placed on basic and writing skills in Cohasset Schools."

Hart also mentioned there is a problem inherent in the comparison made between schools concerning the results of the Basic Skills Tests.

According to Hart, the tests are not standardized, with schools using different tests and even different passing scores. For this reason Hart expressed the opinion that such comparisons between schools should be avoided.

The issue of Basic Skills Tests becoming standardized is one that will be addressed this September at the 20th Annual MASS/MASC Conference.

Presidential Fitness Test

The following Junior High Students successfully score 85% or higher in each category of the Presidential Fitness Test: Grade 7- Alexis Bowen, Jim Donahue, Cindy Dormer, Katy Lord, Katy Murphy, and Desiree Yess. Grade 8- Steve Brown, Danny Bickerstaff, Joe Marks, Marybeth McNamara, Jim Rourke, Ken Sargent, and Adam Whitman.

Areas of testing included arm-strength, abdominal strength, agility, explosive power, speed, and aerobic endurance. Each of the above students received the Presidential Physical Fitness Award patch with the Presidential seal and a certificate signed by President Ronald Reagan.

Eighth grader, Rich Redick, the number one varsity player on the Boys' Tennis Team this past season, was chosen by the South Shore League coaches to be on the 1984 coaches All-Star team. With four more years of varsity play ahead of him, Rich is certain to become a familiar name in sports news!

Dragonwing Published

His dreams are becoming a reality . . .

World's Fair, Dormitzer conceived the notion of bringing the Tall Ships to Boston for the Bicentennial celebration of 1976.

With that purpose secured in his mind, he formed his own non-profit corporation, New England Historic Seaport Inc., in 1974. He put the experience he gained as an organizer in New York to good use.

"I went to London and met with the various captains and ambassadors and convince as mnay as I could to come to Boston for the Bicentennial. I was pretty involved from day one."

His one-man show in 1974 blossomed to an operation of six full-time workers and a force of 35 volunteers by 1976. At the time of the parade, Dormitzer was working 20-hour days in a temporary office on the pier.

Bringing the Tall Ships to Boston was not a project for his own ego. In fact, Dormitzer shuns the limelight as diligently as he works to acheive his goals.

"I never saw it for personal glory or to get my name in the newspapers. All that does is attract stockbrokers and insurance salesmen--people who want to sell you something. I'd just assume to remain in the background," he says.

The New England Historic Seaport brought the ships to Boston again in 1980. Meanwhile, in 1979, he and his board of directors decided to start a sailing training program for young people on chartered boats.

Dormitzer says that while the program itself was very successful, "trying to do it on chartered vessels proved very unsatisfactory." Hence the birth of The Spirit of Massachusetts.

Designed after the Boston Fishing Schooners built in 1889, the Spirit will become the corporations training vessel, taking out 30 young seafarers at a time starting in the summer of 1985

The Spirit cost $750,000 to build and has been appraised at $1.5 million. Over 40,000 man hours went into her construction, and the various woods needed to build the vessel were brought in from all over the United States and as far away as Central America. The Ship took just over a year to build.

With a total length of 127 feet (100 feet on deck) and a water displacement of 140 tons, Dormitzer can certainly justify calling her "quite a vessel."

Funding for the ship was raised entirely by the New England Historic Seaport and through donations by about 25 major corporations in Massachusetts.

For its immediate plans, the Spirit will be sailing down to New Orleans as a goodwill ambassador to the World's Fair in October, and will sail from port to port down south before returning home in the spring. It will spend the rest of the summer showing itself off to the Commonwealth.

Other plans include its participation in the 100th year celebration of the Statue of Liberty in 1986.

What is the source of Dormitzer's personal satisfaction?

"I get satisfaction from accomplishing what I set out to do. It's a highly emotional experience to get a vessel of that size built. When it was lowered into the water, I'm sure there were tears in Chief Shipwright Andrew Davis' eyes, just like there were in mine.

". . . I just decided I should do something for Massachusetts and for the country."

As worker caulks hull of "Spirit" making it water tight, his dog sleeps on the staging above.

More than ever, tenants need to know their rights

By Dave Warren

These are not easy times for apartment dwellers in Massachusetts.

For those searching for a place to live, a daily scan of the newspaper reveals a limited number of apartments for rent, and those that are advertised are generally priced in the $350 to $400 per month range.

Not only are there few apartments available, there are few being built to alleviate the situation. The booming condominium fad has enticed developers away from moderate priced housing, and the fad shows no sign of fading. It's a sellers market out there, and the laws of supply and demands work ever harder against the consumer.

Supply and demand also indirectly affects those who already live in apartments. Unless a tenant knows and uses his rights when dealing with his landlord, he can be taken advantage of or even find himself back in the throng of people looking for apartments.

And while it would be unfair to catagorize all landlords as ruthless, greedy businessmen out to make victims of their tenants, such landlords do exist. And they know if a tenant catches on to their foul or unlawful ways, they don't have much to lose: there will always be someone else eager to move in.

Gloomy as the situation may appear, tenants and future tenants who take proper precautions and exercise their rights can find apartment dwelling a happy and secure alternative to living at home or buying a house.

And thanks to the wealth of literature and tenants' rights groups available for information and advice, everyone can be a happy and secure tenant.

On the literature end of the tenants' rights spectrum, "Legal Tactics" is a valuable resource. A 300-page "handbook for Massachusetts tenants," it was written by the Mass. Chapter of the National Lawyers Guild in conjunction with Urban Planning Aid and tenant organizations from Cambridge and Somerville.

From the start, "Legal Tactics" warns tenants to be wary of landlords.

"The basic rule to remember when looking for an apartment," according to the handbook, "is don't trust the landlord or the rental agent. Even if they seem to be accommodating, that's their ploy so they can rent apartments out quickly. It may be the last time they're polite to you."

And if you have a problem and decide to take your landlord to court, be forewarned: ". . .the courts and other agencies of government are generally hostile to the interests of tenants . . . most judges are more sympathetic to landlords and their idea of private property rights than they are to tenants."

The handbook goes on to list things to check and do before signing a lease, problems commonly encountered by tenants, and how to go about correcting problems.

Don't forget to . . .

Advice given by the handbook to tenants and potential tenants includes:

--Inspect the apartment yourself before signing a lease.

--Read the lease carefully and make sure you understand it before you sign.

--If you and the landlord agree to any changes or improvements in the lease, get them in writing.

--Have witnesses present (not roomates or relatives) if the landlord won't put changes in writing.

--When you move in, your landlord can only make you pay for the cost of a new lock and three months rent: the first month, the last month and a security deposit equal to one month's rent. The landlord must put the last month's rent and the security deposit in a bank, and you receive the interest from the money.

These are just a few of the hundreds of tips provided in the handbook, which also lists all state and federal laws pertaining to tenants and the leasing of apartments.

If you're more inclined to talking to someone about your rights instead of reading about them, there are many tenant groups out there willing to listen and advise.

'The basic rule to remember when looking for an apartment...is don't trust the landlord or the rental agent.'

One of the largest of these groups is the Massachusetts Tenants Organization (MTO). Based in Boston, the group promotes tenants' rights, advises tenants on dealing with landlords, and drafts legislation to strengthen the rights of tenants statewide.

As far as the South Shore is concerned, one of the most important laws pertaining to tenants was passed in 1980, according to MTO Legislative Director Bob Van Meter.

"The condominium conversion law requires landlords and developers to give tenants at least one year's notice prior to eviction," Van Meter said. "The elderly, handicapped, and low to moderate income tenants must be given two years notice."

The legislation also requires the landlord to allow tenants to remain longer if comparable housing can't be found, and they must pay from $750 to $1,000 of the cost to move tenants to another building.

The condo conversion law also states that rent increases must be restricted to the Consumer Price Index (CPI) or ten percent, whichever is lower, and says tenants must be given the opportunity (90 days) to buy condo units in the building at the same or better terms than advertised.

Towns and cities may also impose further restrictions on the conversion by a two-thirds vote of their ruling bodies, according to the law. Van Meter says Salem and Amherst have voted in additional regulations in their towns; no towns have voted to eliminate any restrictions, he said.

"We view the (condo conversion) law as a substantial victory, and certainly an improvement over the situation as it existed," Van Meter said. "But I don't think it will end displacement due to condominium conversion."

Double-edged sword

The topic of tenants' rights, Van Meter said, is a double-edged sword. While new legislation protecting tenants has been passed, changes in the housing market have made it more difficult for tenants.

"In Massachusetts, we won some significant victories in the early 70's," he said. "Then there were some defeats in the mid-70's, and we've seen some improvements since 1977.

"But at the same time, there has been increasing pressure on the housing market. Vacancy rates are very low, and they're not going to get better. Condo conversion has claimed 35,000 rental housing units in Massachusetts in the last ten years--and new rental housing units are not being constructed."

Condo conversion, Van Meter pointed out, "is a serious problem in the South Shore area particularly, because it is a desirable place to live."

Mass. Tenants is constantly working on drafting new legislation. One bill the group is currently pushing in the state legislature (it was defeated in May by one vote by the House and by four votes in the Senate) is a just cause for eviction bill, to protect tenants from unfair evictions. Van Meter said they hope to get the bill reconsidered this year.

There are two general pieces of advice Van Meter stresses to tenants. The first is to get a lease. Without one, he says, a landlord can evict a tenant at any time.

The second is for tenants to try to settle things as a group with their landlord before taking the matter to court. "Even if you're well-organized, try to negotiate with your landlord."

This article touches on just a few of the things tenants should know when looking for an apartment or dealing with lanlord problems. To fight for your rights you have to know them first; landlords know all the tricks, and if a tenant is ignorant ot his rights he can be an easy target.

For more information on tenants' rights, check the phone book or call the Massachusetts Tenants Organization at 367-6260.

By way of the Piscataqua River bridge

By Lois Martin

Perhaps without your knowing it the Class of 54 met last week. And it is not without pause and privilege that people who left high school to bloom 30 years ago, reunite to see what happened to the rest of the crowd.

John Edes wanted to know if "that bald guy was in our class." John could get away with saying that because he's got all his hair and because Jane Smith had just told him he looked like Howard Keel. 'Course only our age group remembers Howard and fewer remember John Edes, I suppose, since he never sang in Showboat."

PATCHES

I wasn't going to go, you know. It's a busy summer what with moving and the balloon festival coming this weekend. We'd all been working on that. But after one John and two Janes called me to urge me on, I decided in a flash to leave town at 5 a.m. that Saturday and head toward Maine.

It has never failed to be an important moment for me when I see that Piscataqua River bridge coming toward me on Rte. 95. I rush toward it along the gray ribbon roadway and I cross the bridge beaming. Mine, the State of Maine is mine, I have to go there now and then to get it all over me.

There are those who have said I was kicked out of the state, that I ruined the Downeast reputation they like of being taciturn, savvy and fond of two-word sentences. None of that is true. That is only Maine's publicity to entice the big spenders from out of state. I choose to live where I am. I love it. I could confuse it with Ellsworth in half-asleep states of mind. But just as clear is my choice and my need to go back up that hill and downeast every so often.

Our reunion was held in the room next to that of the Class of '59. They enjoined us throughout the evening to be more quiet. We were, said the young twerps, rowdy. We were flattered.

Cameras were flashing all over the place. There were clusters of men and women hugging for the mug shots. John and I presented what loosely might be called a program. For my part I imitated all our teachers and they had to guess who they were, those important educational influences from the past. They got them all right.

One couple had 'five and a half' grandchildren. They won that prize if they wanted it. Elmer Lunt came back swarthing his way through classmates and not looking a thing like he did in the yearbook. He was bearded, cool, man of the world, dressed in a trench coat and escorting a charming woman.

Jimmy Patten was there. We all love Jimmy. He's done well, as my mother's group says of nice people who've created a strong niche. I'd like Jimmy whether he had or hadn't.

I reintroduced myself to Scott Bunker, as Lois Perkins. He asked why in #&*! I'd thought it necessary to say that when I obviously hadn't changed a bit. Further, he said, he was relieved to see I didn't act any better either. Talk about having your head turned.

A woman in the Class of '59 introduced herself to me. She was someone I'd babysat for. Their crowd joined ours on the dance floor. It was a jitterbug evening, just like they used to do and they're good at it. There were no break dancers there.

There were, naturally, subtle changes. For example, people kept passing their cameras to someone to see if that person's eyes could focus on the little number of exposures shown on the top.

Herman Savage had the best time of anybody there. His dance partner was put through highly sophisticated acrobatics just to keep up with Herman.

It was a brief encounter, familiar ships passing in life and sending signals of renewed friendship and for that time, of youth, ours as we remember it.

The next day I headed home, back across that bridge again to rejoin the present instead of the past. Some of them are planning to come down over Labor Day. They'll be welcome.

It was wonderful to see them, especially Anitra, friend of my girlhood. There was something poignant about our being together because as adults we are always apart. She's wonderful and still looks like Esther Williams. I never did manage to look like Rita Hayworth, but no one held that against me.

But I'll tell you I still don't believe that was Elmer Lunt.

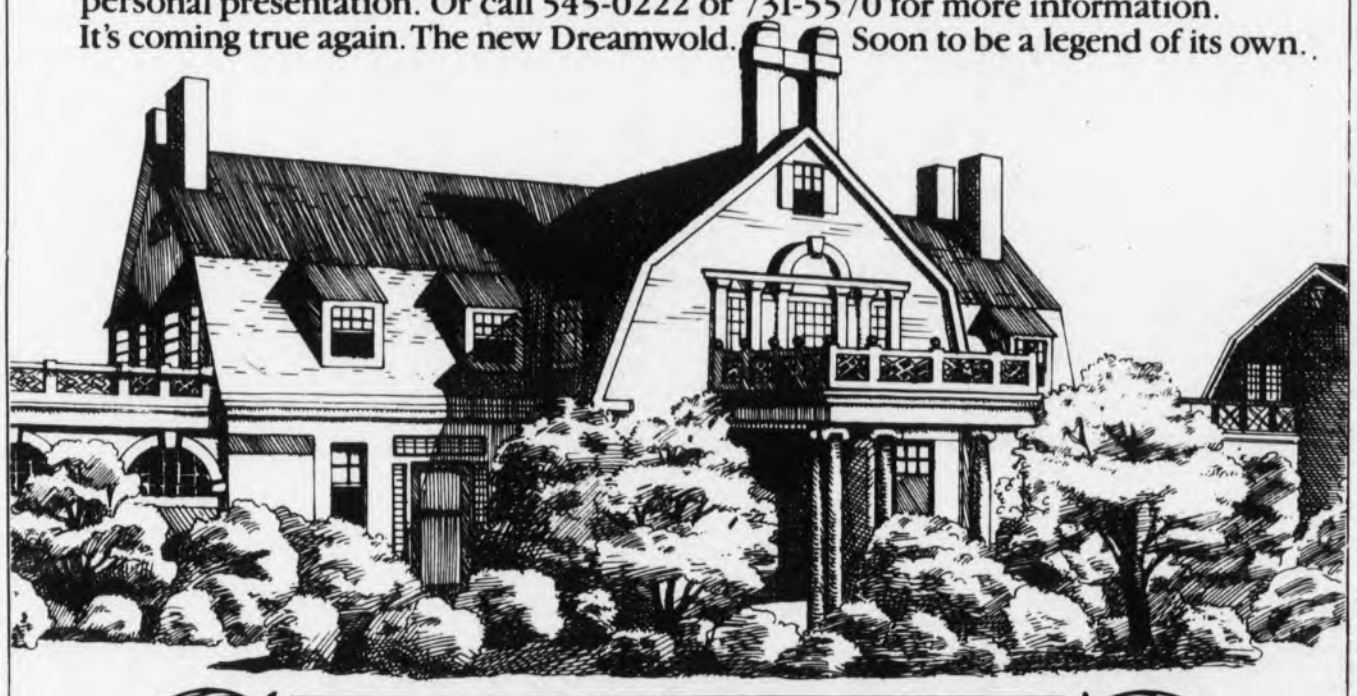
Once upon a time, not so far away,

a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.



Now it's coming true again.

All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

'Riding the Bound' recalls 350th birthday

By Robert Fraser

Times flies — and Scituate is to celebrate its 350th birthday. I dimly remember attending the 300th anniversary back in 1936. Scituate's Tercentury was marked by a number of small historical pageants here and there around the town.

One of these was "Riding the Bound", a portrayal of the representatives of the Massachusetts Bay Colony (now Boston) and New Plimouth (as Plymouth was first called), riding along the border between the two settlements and reaffirming the boundary.

The pageant was held near the Lincoln Mill at North Scituate where the "Old Colony" or "Patent Line" was first started.

This famous boundary was settled in 1640 after years of arguments between the two colonies. Those who actually created the final border were Israel Stoughton and John Endicott of Massachusetts Bay and William Bradford and Edward Winslow of New Plimouth. All except Stoughton were governors or ex-governors of their respective settlements.

The Old Colony Line starts at a rock at the mouth of Bound Brook right under the Lincoln Mill building and runs in a more or less straight line to the Rhode Island border. This line is the first in the New World to be settled by elected officials, the start of our basic freedom.

The earlier (1632) Mason-Dixon Line is actually mentioned in the king's charter of the southern colonies of Virginia and Maryland.

Local men, in costume and on horseback, met that summer's day in 1936 at the Lincoln Mill to act out the "Riding of the Bound."

Cohasseters Donald Parsons portrayed Capt. Roger Clapp, Howard Bates protrayed Maj. Ebenezer Lushwood, and Arthur Wood, Jr., protrayed Lt. Joseph Fisher; all of the Massachusetts Bay Colony.

Scituater Harry Bates portrayed Cornet Robert Stetson, Cohasseter Everett Wheelwright portrayed Josiah Winslow, and Greenbusher Thomas Stearns portrayed Lt. Southworth; all of New Plimouth.

Years later, Thomas Stearns vividly recalled that day. He said that Everett Wheelwright has kept his horse in the barn since the previous fall and it was now most anxious to get outside. To wear the lively animal down, Everett rode his horse at full gallop from the barn to the mill. Stearns said that Everett came up to the group in a clatter of hooves calmy smoking a pipe "as if he was home sitting in his living room chair."

Howard rode his giant horse "Mike," one of his mismatched pair of chestnut work stallions. "Mike" was the big, dumb, slow horse; his helpmate "Harry" was the smaller, quick moving, intelligent animal.

People soon gathered to watch the pageant. The six men, on their horses, would go only as far as from the Lincoln Mill to the marker on Country Way, about two hundred feet. As the pageant got under way and one of the horsemen started moving, the crowd pressed forward so as not to miss anything. The horse shied and stopped. Nothing would move the animal.

Another rider tried, the crowd again moved forward, and his horse stopped. One after another, the riders tried to go through the crowd but all the horses stood stock still.

Finally, Howard gave "Mike" a kick in the ribs. The great horse gunted then phlegmatically sholdered his way through the crowd "like a snowplow through a drift." The other riders quickly formed up in back of Howard and the boundary was officially ridden.

Recreation programs

AEROBICS EXERCISE CLASSES

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for Aerobic Exercise classes taught by Margaret Watson.

Registrations are now being accepted for the following classes which will begin Tuesday and Thursday, July 24 and 26 at the Town Hall auditorium:

Tuesday evenings: beginning Tuesday, July 24, from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m.; Thursday evenings: beginning Thursday, July 26, from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m.

Classes are four weeks in duration and fees are offered on the following basis: One class — $7.50 for four one-hour classes; Two classes — $15 for eight one-hour classes.

To register, please call the Recreation Department office at 383-6791. Non-residents may register on a space available basis.

DOG OBEDIENCE CLASSES

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer two levels of instruction for Dog Obedience classes, to be taught by Mrs. Laurie Ann Cleveland. All classes will be held on the Town Common, beginning Thursday evening, August 2. Pre-registration, by phone, is necessary.

Beginning training classes will be held at 6:30 p.m. Thursdays. The purpose of these classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered will include proper use of voice, correction, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on dog ownership and responsibility will also be included.

The obedience will include those exercises beneficial to the pet owner as well as those thinking about eventually showing their dog in obedience. An intermediate class will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursdays. This class is designed for dogs that have had some prior training or have completed the Recreation Dept. Beginner Class.

For the above classes owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck and adding four inches. Absolutely no spike collars will be allowed! It is also strongly suggested that handler wear comfortable shoes and clothes for these sessions. For all classes: The fee is $15 per dog for the eight week, one hour per week program. Dogs should be a minimum of three months of age, and there is no limit on maximum age.

To register, please call the Recreation office at 383-6791.

Teen Dance

The Cohasset Community Center is sponsoring a Teen Dance for Cohasset teenagers Aug. 24, from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m. at the Town Hall. The charge will be $3 per person.

Telephone Directory

The Cohasset Rotary Club's 21st edition of the Telephone Directory and Buyer's Guide has been distributed by mail to over 2,700 homes and businesses with listed phone numbers during the past week.

The directory, with its newly designed cover, is the major fund raising project of the Cohasset Rotary Club Scholarship Fund, and has raised over $100,000 in revenue from advertising and donations in the past twenty years.

A listing of all scholarship recipients since the Memorial Scholarship Fund was established in 1947 is listed in the directory on page 73. The telephone book was established in 1963 when the New England Telephone Company began combining telephone numbers with subscribers in other towns in a regional phone book.

Residents wishing changes to their listing, or desiring additional copies of the directory, can contact the Rotary Club by using the self-addressed envelope found inside the directory, or writing to Post Office Box 36, Cohasset, MA 02025.

by Joan Pinkham

Most of us expect nothing short of perfection for those few weeks out of the year we're on vacation. Mother Nature is urged to cooperate by providing just the right amount of sunshine—not too much to put us out of commission with a bad burn. Too little can ruin it all by confining us to quarters, looking out at rain-drenched sands. Then there's a little problem known as jet lag that can make travellers to distant places wish they'd stayed home. When President and Mrs. Reagan went to China in April, it's reported that they used a diet that was 37 years in the making and the result of research into circadian rhythms carried out by Dr. Charles F. Ehret at Argonne, a Federal Dept. Energy laboratory. They have a wallet-sized card with details of the diet and to receive one, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Anti-Jet-Lag Diet, Argonne National Lab, 9700 South Cass Ave., Argonne, Ill. 60439. The lab would appreciate hearing from people for whom the diet has—or has not—worked. For those who throw caution to the winds and forget any and all diets while on vacation, here is another of Millie Carr's contributuions to our column, guaranteed to appeal to us all and called

Few, if any of us, have vacationed in Newfoundland, but a dear young couple our family is getting to know are there now, visiting his native land. Sue and Dwight Vincent are getting to know this area well while he is a student at M.I.T. and she is writing a textbook on flute playing. Our newlyweds like to feast on this sinfully rich traditional Canadian sweet that is said to have originated in Nanaimo, B.C. However, in New York where a bar sells for $1 each it's called a New York Special and in London is known as a London Fog. Sue writes: "There seem to be several versions floating around," and here is hers:

NANAIMO BARS

First Layer

1/2 c. butter in double boiler until melted. Add 1/4 c. sugar, 5 T cocoa, 1 well-beaten egg, 1 T vanilla. Put 2 c. graham cracker crumbs on bottom of 9 x 9" pan. Pour layer one over crumbs and put in fridge.

Second layer.

1/4 c. butter melted in double boiler. Add 2 c. confectioners sugar, 2 T of Jello Americana Golden Egg Custard powder, 2 T hot water. Take pan out of fridge, put on second layer.

Third layer:

1 T butter, 2 squares chocolate in double boiler, melted. Take pan out of fridge and put third layer on. Refrigerate until served. Note: Coconut and/or nuts may be sprinkled on top.

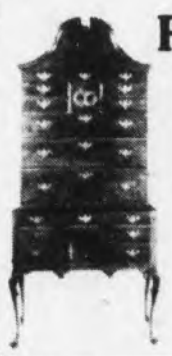
Life can be just one long vacation for retirees, free to while away their days doing their favorite things. For Bob and Doris Ewart life took on a new twist a few years ago when they became charter members of the Bed and Breakfast League Ltd. of Washington, D.C. Without stirring from their comfortable home overlooking the marshes of the South River and the Atlantic in the distance, they're meeting all sorts of people. Vacationers who come to spend a night or two in their guest house often become fast friends as they make the Ewart's home a starting-off place as they tour the area. Having breakfast by the pool, they might enjoy this recipe from St. Lucia which Norma Reder brought back from the West Indies where they had chartered a boat last winter:



BANANA BREAD

3 very ripe bananas
2 eggs
1/4 lb. oleo
1 c. each of flour and sugar
1 tsp. baking soda

Mash and beat bananas until foamy. Keep beating as other ingredients are added, until mixture is fluffy. Place in buttered 8 x 8" pan and bake at 350° until center springs back to touch.

Summer sports scene

EIGHTH GRADE BOYS BASKETBALL

Tuesday, Cohasset crushed Marshfield 56 to 39. This win was due mainly to the incredible offensive playing by Michael Smith. David Shumaker played outstanding defense and shut down Marshfield's best player. Both David Shultz and Jason Marsac did an excellent job bringing the ball up the court under pressure.

JUNIOR HIGH GIRLS BASKETBALL

Tuesday, Cohasset lost to Marshfield 18 to 30. Cohasset was just overpowered by excellent shooters. Debbie Hartley was Cohasset's high scorer with 10 points.

Wednesday the girls suffered a disappointing loss to Whitman/Hanson 24 to 20. The team came back from a 14 point deficit to close within four points of Whitman/Hanson. Cohasset's comeback was sparked by the good offensive play of Kristin Ellinger and by the excellent hustle of Debbie Hartley and Lizzy O'Leary.

FRESHMAN GIRLS BASKETBALL

Wednesday, Cohasset beat Whitman/Hanson 34 to 31. The team played well when it had to, and played very good team defense. Great hustle by Maria Cahill and excellent passing and shooting by Maureen O'Leary led Cohasset to their fifth straight win this summer.

FLYING SCOT RACE SERIES

The Flying Scots raced once again Saturday under clear skies with a westerly wind blowing about 10 to 18 miles per hour. In an exciting race, Peter Chapman finished first, followed closely behind by Mike Ellis. After several place changes, Bob Jackson came in third; Steve Bartow came in fourth; Peter Goedecke came in fifth, and Ray Kasperowicz came in sixth.

COHASSET SWIM TEAM

The Cohasset Swim Team opened their season Friday at Eel River Beach Club in Plymouth. Overall, the team demonstrated excellent effort and team spirit, finishing with a hard-earned 352 to 195 victory over the smaller-sized but talented Eel River team. Divers gave a great performance to open the meet, and in swimming events everybody showed tremendous improvement on their times.

There is an honor given each week to those members of the swim team and diving team who excel in effort, enthusiasm, dedication, improvement and attendance. Those who receive this honor are known as the "Stars of the Week." The "Stars of the Week" for the first week of practice were: Emily Spencer, Robin deVito, John Kinchla, Gale Jancsics, Gregg Delaney, Matt Buckley, Jamie Hoffman, Kathy Haase and Cindy Dormer.

The "Stars of the Week" for the second week are: Brendan Kinchla, Marnie deMichele, Danny Baird, Cindy Jones, Sophie Redfield, Dawn Fitzgerald, Kristin Martin, Emily Tague, Toni Cann and Carrie Ripley.

Friday, July 20, Cohasset hosts an old rival squad, the Duxbury Aqua-Dux. The meet begins with diving events promptly at 1 p.m. Come up to Cohasset Swim Center and cheer on your home team! They need your

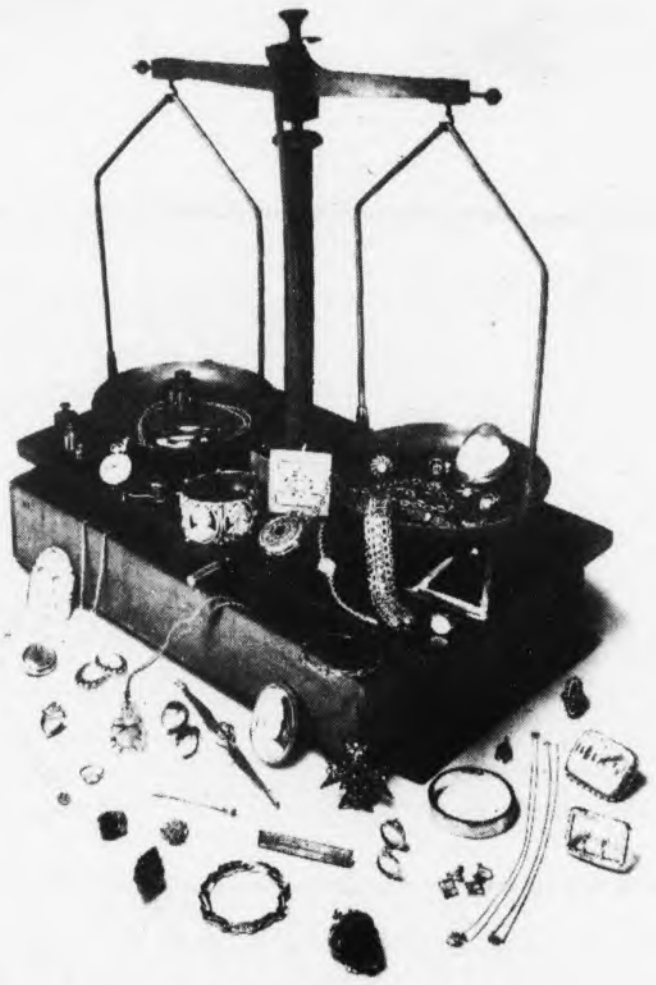
Travel Along with Evie Young



Victor Hugo, the French writer, described France's grand port city by saying, "Take Versailles, add to it Antwerp and you will have Bordeaux." You can easily spend a week here gazing at splendid 18th-century architecture and smelling the cool, musty odor of maturing wine. Taste regional dishes and listen to bells toll the grape harvest. Swim on the fine, white-sand beaches of the Arcachon Basin. Within Bordeaux's sphere of influence is St. Emilion, a picturesque, medieval village perched like a horseshoe atop limestone cliffs that overlook the valley of the Dordogne. Although highly respected for its wines, it is the village itself that is a must, retaining much of the medieval charm that once pervaded the region.

Ready to take the plunge are the swimmers at last week's swim meet against Duxbury at the town pool.

EMT's oppose committee

Selectmen are preparing to appoint an Emergency Medical Advisory Committee at their August 8 meeting, while firefighters, vehemently opposed to the group, await the vote with trepidation.

Opposing viewpoints on the need for such a committee has led to a particularly precarious situation between the fire department, its management and town officials. Whereas selectmen see the proposed committee as advisory only, firefighters decry the need for its formation.

Fire Chief Martin Dooley, who has continually, but in more moderate tones, denounced the concept of such a committee, is in the process of reviewing the proposed charter. He will make an official recommendation to selectmen before August 8.

Union firefighters and EMT's steadfastly refuse to understand the logic of a committee. They are the only department in the area with a committee looking into their operation, they have stated. Why should citizens participate in an advisory committee of this type, when the state firmly regulates all procedures relating to EMT and ambulance service they have asked.

An ambulance study committee has just recently completed its investigations of the department, and in a matter of months we are subjected to the whims of a permanent committee, they argued. More demoralizing, they have said, is that the Cohasset Fire Department and its EMT service is becoming the butt of a lot of scarcasm throughout the South Shore.

Selectmen chairman Cliff Mitman said this week that the Emergency Medical Advisory Committee is not a foregone conclusion. The only way in which he would favor the committee is in its capacity as an advisory group to selectmen, never to stray near the daily operations and management of the department and its EMT service.

As for the need for the advisory committee, Mitman stated that the medical professionals who have volunteered their expertise will only enhance, not diminish a fine EMT service.

According to the proposed committee charter, "the three-member committee will consist of at least one medical doctor and two medical/health professionals, such as a registered nurse or licensed paramedic. The purpose of the advisory committee is to advise selectmen in the overall operation of the medical aspects of the town's medical services delivery system. The committee shall recommend changes for improvement

Town officals forge ahead with SEMASS waste plan

At their August 8 meeting, selectmen will be meeting with members of the solid waste disposal study committee to concentrate more closely on the the costs of contracting with a trash-to-energy regional service.

Although an official of SEMASS, the firm which is proposing a Rochester processing plant, warned selectmen to proceed expeditiously, town officials stated the final decision would be made by a town meeting vote.

George Tobey, director of SEMASS project development, said that any delay in signing a contract might preclude Cohasset from the service which is based on a "first come, first serve" basis.

Despite the warning, selectmen chairman Cliff Mitman said he would not sign a contract without final approval from town meeting.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle concurred, adding, "town meeting has always controlled the money for the landfill. We can't spend money we don't have. I feel this is an important issue and the town should decide."

Selectmen and members of the disposal study committee agree that the regional waste-to-energy system proposed by SEMASS seems to be the best longterm solution for Cohasset's waste disposal needs. The only issue impeding a signed contract is actual costs to the town, in comparison to other disposal alternatives.

Before the August 8 meeting, disposal study committee members will compile data on the operation of the system, and perhaps visit similar facilities which are currently in operation.

In a presentation before selectmen, advisory committee members and other interested residents, disposal study committee member Don DiMichele noted that the SEMASS proposal was the committee's choice as the best longterm solution for Cohasset. According to the latest data, the Cohasset landfill has an expected life of nine more years. For the past six years, the committee has studied various alternatives, of which resource recovery "makes the most sense."

In a prepared talk and slide presentation, Tobey said Tuesday night that SEMASS can offer Cohasset a 27-

Pepperell man named health agent

Joseph Godzik, 48, of Pepperell, has been appointed health agent by the Cohasset Board of Health.

Godzik, a member of the Pepperell Board of Health for the past year and a half, officially begins his Cohasset duties August 6. He accepted the Cohasset position Saturday, and will replace resigning health agent Elaine Eliopolous.

A doctor of veterinary medicine, Godzik has a Master of Science degree in Public Health, and is board certified from the American College of Veterinary Preventitive Medicine.

The starting salary for the town's health agent is $21,058, but there may be an increase if approved by the personnel committee. The board of health currently does not have a contract with the health agent.

In a telephone interview with the new health agent, Godzik noted that Pepperell and Cohasset are similar communities with comparable problems and objectives. It was the community that attracted him to apply for the position, he added.

According to Godzik, who is married with four children, "I have the background and education to offer a comprehensive health service to this town." He added that Pepperell currently does not have a health agent, but utilizes the service of part time consultants.

He also noted that he will not be commuting from Pepperell, located just south of Nashua, N.H. He and his family will soon be scouting the area for real estate.

Cohasset's week . . .

Golden volunteers

Cohasset residents wishing to volunteer for the Bill Golden campaign for state senator should contact one of his three Cohasset coordinators, Bill Golden said today. Golden, who resides in Weymouth, grew up in Cohasset.

Co-coordinators for the Bill Golden campaign in Cohasset are Alice Daunt, 383-1163; John McNabb, Jr., 383-1818; and Priscilla Tebbetts, 383-1662. "Bill has a lot of supporters in Cohasset," said McNabb.

Help needed for the campaign in Cohasset includes phone calling of registered voters, holding signs, placing lawn signs, handing out literature, and working on the day of the Democratic Primary, Tuesday, Sept. 18.

Water table tests

During the spring months of this year, the Cohasset Board of Health performed numerous water table readings throughout the town. Many of the engineering firms have not submitted the location of the holes dug. If this information is not received by Aug. 1, 1984, the data collected may not be able to be used for design purposes.

Thus, all developers/property owners should ensure that their engineer submits a plot plan depicting the bounds of the lot and exact address so that the file on a given lot is complete.

If there are any questions, please do not hesitate to call the office (383-1664).

Hazardous waste day

The Board of Health wishes to remind townspeople that a Household Hazardous Waste Clean Up Day will be held in the fall. Townspeople will be able to dispose of hazardous products stored in their homes. For example, pesticides, lacquers, paints, thinners and other hazardous substances can all be disposed of on this special clean up day. It is very important that these materials not be disposed of at the town landfill. If you have questions about what is deemed "hazardous," please do not hesitate to call the Cohasset Board of Health office (383-1644) before disposing of the product. We will be happy to advise you.

Marsh resigns

Assistant Town Accountant Jane Marsh will be retiring Aug. 31 after 17½ years, Town Accountant William Signorelli told Selectmen last week.

He said he informed the board of Marsh's decision "regretably. She was a very dedicated employee."

Signorelli did not give the reason for Marsh's retirement.

Selectmen agreed to consult the Personnel Committee for possible reclassification of the assistant town accountant's position.

Signorelli said he'd like to stipulate that applicants for the $13,000 a year position have accounting and computer experience.

"Do you think you could get someone with experience in accounting and computers for $13,000 a year?" Rocco Laugelle asked. "Would you recommend the salary be something other than $13,000?"

"Obviously, yes," Signorelli said.

Selectmen agreed to withhold advertising for the position until the personnel committee had given its input on the position.

Selectmen on cable TV

American Cablesystems will be filming the Selectmen's meetings beginning in August. John Ronan, community program director, met with the board last week to 'case the set' before rolling in the cameras.

His only hint was that members avoid wearing white. Ronan said all cameramen would be volunteers who gone through American Cablesystems' workshop.

Conley grievance

In a letter written to his fellow union members, Fire Capt. Richard Conley apologized for a clerical error he made in this week's payroll, and cited the reason as, "Chief Dooley wants confrontation instead of cooperation."

Capt. Conley noted in the letter that because of a clerical error he made earlier this week, he received a written reprimand from the chief, the second in a week. But the captain added, "anyone with the least amount of administrative ability could have corrected the error. If you do not receive your overtime money this week, it will be because Chief Dooley wants confrontation instead of cooperation."

Chief Martin Dooley refused comment regarding the letter, stating "disciplinary action within a department belongs in the department. If a person wishes to publicize discplinary action taken against him, that's his business."

Within the letter to the union, Capt. Conley also noted, that twice this year selectmen failed to sign the town payroll, and Chief Dooley made a similar oversight once. Executive Secretary Mark Lanza said the failure to sign the payroll by selectmen was corrected immediately and the payroll was only a couple of hours late on both occasions.

According to Capt. Conley's letter, he stated, "I will follow the proper grievance procedure to have this reprimand removed from my file. With the events that have happened in the last two weeks, it is a foregone conclusion that Chief Dooley wants a long hot summer."

A Remembrance

At 7 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 5, South Shore citizens concerned about the nuclear arms escalation will join for a candle light ceremony to remind us again of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the sights of the only atomic weapons explosions used in warfare. The purpose of this event is to express the hope and determination that these weapons will not be used again in war.

The ceremony will be conducted at the Hingham Harbor bandstand on Route 3-A.

In 1985 the Nation will mark the 40 year since the conclusion of the Second World War in both the Atlantic and Pacific Theatres. In the same year, on Aug. 6 and 9 we will mark the 40th anniversary since the first use of atomic weapons.

Planned events include music, a candle lighting ceremony, a period where participants will have an opportunity to share their concerns, and a candelight walk to Hingham Square. All events will conclude by 8:30 p.m.

The coordinating committee welcomes the support and participation of individuals, churches, and other groups. For information call Bob Broker at 749-3788. Financial support may be addressed to the South Shore Peace Coalition, 460 Main Street, P. O. Box 501, Norwell, MA 02061.

Members of the coordinating committee are: Kathie Alcieri, Bob and Carol Broker, Margo Cartwright, Fan Leonard, R. Joseph Vaughan, and Jane Zimmerman.

in the operating procedures, training curriculum and records system currently used to deliver emergency medical services to the town."

The committee's charge also states it will "give the selectmen guidance in the development and improvement of specifications and certification requirements for its emergency medical services personnel and equipment."

The committee would submit a written report to the board quarterly.

John DeBassio, who was appointed selectmen's liaison to the fire department also believes the advisory committee is a positive step toward maintaining a quality service, and achieving an even higher level of quality service to the community.

As a former Cohasset police chief, DeBassio empathizes with the firefighter's concerns, but he feels they will be alleviated once the group commences. "I too would be concerned about a civilian group coming into and observing a service they know little about, representing some type of overview. I know where the men are coming from. Very seldom do you want people from the outside coming in and sitting in judgment of our work. I could see why the firefighters would be upset if this committee was to be sitting in judgement. But they are strictly advisory. And I hope, if properly used, it will be a benefit to the town."

The selectman continued, "if this board in any way assumes it shall dictate policies or make rules and regulations, I would not support such a group."

Both Mitman and DeBassio do not see the committee's formation having a negative, demoralizing effect on the fire department which has been experiencing some separate stressful confrontations.

"I don't think it should affect the morale of the EMT's or the fire department," Mitman said."We all have the same goal, to have the best EMT service possible. No one should construe the formation of this committee as punitive, or that the EMT's are not doing the job. I view this advisory committee as a positive step."

Mitman also noted that selectmen need to pursue last year's town meeting mandate to investigate the problems within the fire department. Mitman agreed that town officials have set aside that order while other issues have been pursued. "We have kind of put the investigation aside while negotiations with the firefighters' union continue. But the ways things are going, we might have to begin that study before a contract is signed," he added.

Construction of a transfer station at the Cedar Street landfill is averaged at $90,000, he added, including the concrete pads, the asphalt, electrical service, purchase of three compactor-bins and construction of the I-beam and roof. SEMASS officials have also offered their assistance in planning the landfill conversion, Tobey noted. Operating costs of the station are more definitive, based on actual costs prepared by SEMASS. Annual operating costs in 1987 will average about $68,000.

Disposal committee member DiMichele argued that selectmen should proceed as quickly as possible, saying that town meeting approval is almost "academic" at this point. Since selectmen and the study committee agree in intent, and a contract should be signed soon, it might be impractical to wait for a fall town meeting.

Waitkus' World of Weather

June seemed to have its priorities mixed up. The first half brought blistering temperatures with a record setting spring heat wave, while summer began at 12:02 a.m. on the 21st, feeling like the first day of fall. I'll tell you more about this unusual month in my summary, but let me take you back to another time and another summer.

As the year 1936 dawned, the nation was fighting its way up from the depths of a world depression. Drought plagued the southwest, and there was complete agricultural failure in the Dust Bowl regions. War clouds loomed over Europe as Hitler began his march into infamy.

But those problems were nothing compared to what lay ahead. In 1936, the nation would sizzle in the heat of one of America's hottest summers. As early as January, temperatures soared into the 90's in Texas, as anticyclonic controls began to set in. As the year wore on, a steady westerly wind circulation became ingrained, and torrid air from the interior of the nation streamed northward.

During July and August, record temperatures were set throughout the country. In Indiana, pavements buckled and corn actually popped on the stalk. In the large industrial cities of the northeast, hordes of people left their sweltering tenements to seek relief in the broiling streets and parks. In this time before the widespread use of air conditioning and mechanical refrigeration, there was little one could do to keep cool.

Ice dealers reported unprecedented demand from their customers, and could not meet the needs. Children chased horse-drawn ice wagons, darting back into the shade with a sliver of ice as a reward.

The scorching heat wave was nationwide and affected all phases of life in both urban and rural sections. In New York City's Central Park, the temperature reached 102.3 degrees; in Philadelphia, an astonishing 110 degrees in the shade. In the Plains states, the temperature rose to 120 degrees, while in the Deep South, discomfort was heightened by oppressive humidity.

Livestock ranches suffered immeasurable losses, crops wilted and died as the shadow of death spread across the land. In New York City, the Associated Press reported 1626 heat-related deaths in July alone. By the end of the summer of 1936, 4768 people were dead, victims of Mother Nature's searing assault.

June Summary

The month of June 1984 brought a record setting spring heat wave, above average precipitation and a backward temperature regime where the last 15 days were colder than the first 15. June 8 to 11 saw the longest and hottest pre-summer heat wave in 59 years. This period of extreme heat may well be the hottest that we will see in 1984.

A study of heat waves in St. Louis and Georgia last summer, conducted by the Centers for Disease Control, brought forward an interesting point. Dr. Jeffrey Lybarger of the Center for Environmental Health, which carried out the study, said that using fans to keep cool is only helpful when they pull in cooler air. If the fan is pulling in hotter air, then it adds to the buildup of heat indoors. He said, "Once the temperature of the air being moved by the fan is too hot (above body temperature) it directly contributes to body heat. And when high humidity combines with the heat, then the movement of the air by the fan no longer helps evaporate perspiration, which is another way the body normally cools itself." Thus the report stated, "the use of fans may not be an appropriate health measure during extreme heat.

In addition to the heat wave, another highlight of the month was the storm of June 25th. This storm, being fed moisture from a sub-tropical storm, left flooding rains over Southeastern Massachusetts and Cape Cod. While Boston only reported .23 inches, our region received 2-3 inches and the Cape 4-5 inches. The sub-tropical storm which formed off the Florida coast, tracked northward, to the east of New England, battering Nova Scotia and the Canadian Maritime Provinces on the 26th.

On June 7th a beautiful double rainbow was observed over the sea to the southeast. This luminous arc was formed by the rays of the setting sun, and nothing in nature is more awe inspiring. In Judaism and Christianity the rainbow has special significance. In the book of Genesis, Chapter 9, is described a covenant made by God to Noah and his sons, and with their descendants, and with all living beings, all birds, animals, and everything that came out of the arc with them when the Great Flood receded. God said, "I promise that never again will all living beings be destroyed by a flood; never again will a flood destroy the earth. As a sign of this everlasting covenant which I am making with you and with all living beings, I am putting my bow in the clouds. It will be the sign of my covenant with the world. Whenever I cover the sky with clouds and the rainbow appears, I will remember my promise to you and to all the animals that a flood will never again destroy all living beings. When the rainbow appears in the clouds, I will remember the everlasting covenant between me and all living beings on earth. That is the sign of the promise which I am making to all living beings."

The next time you see a rainbow, think of God, and the external beauty of the bow will be transformed to an inner peace, with the realization that even though you're a mere man, God cares for you.

Total precipitation for June, at my station in Marshfield, was 5.39 inches, 2.73 inches above normal. The maximum 24-hour precipitation was 2.50 inches on the 25th. Rain, .01 inch or more, occurred on 12 days with a trace on two days. Total precipitation this year has been 34.81 inches, 13.74 inches above normal.

The mean temperature was 66.7 degrees, 0.2 degrees above normal. The average daily maximum reading was 76.5 degrees, while the average daily minimum was 57 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 43 degrees on the 16th, with a high reading of 95 degrees on the 11th.

There were four clear days, 19 partly cloudy days, and seven cloudy days. The average wind speed was 11.2 mph; normal is 11.4 mph. The highest observed gust was 37 mph on June 24th.

Weather Q and A

Q. What is heat stroke?

A. This is the most dangerous of heat related problems. Heat stroke occurs when the body loses its ability to get rid of excess heat. The victim stops sweating while the body temperature rises to very high levels. Emegency treatment consists of ice water baths, alcohol rubs or ice water enemas. The body temperature must be reduced to a safe level and the attention of a physician should be sought as quickly as possible. Heat stroke comes on rapidly and often with serious consequences, so you should exercise caution during periods of extreme heat.

Have a good day and a nice forever.

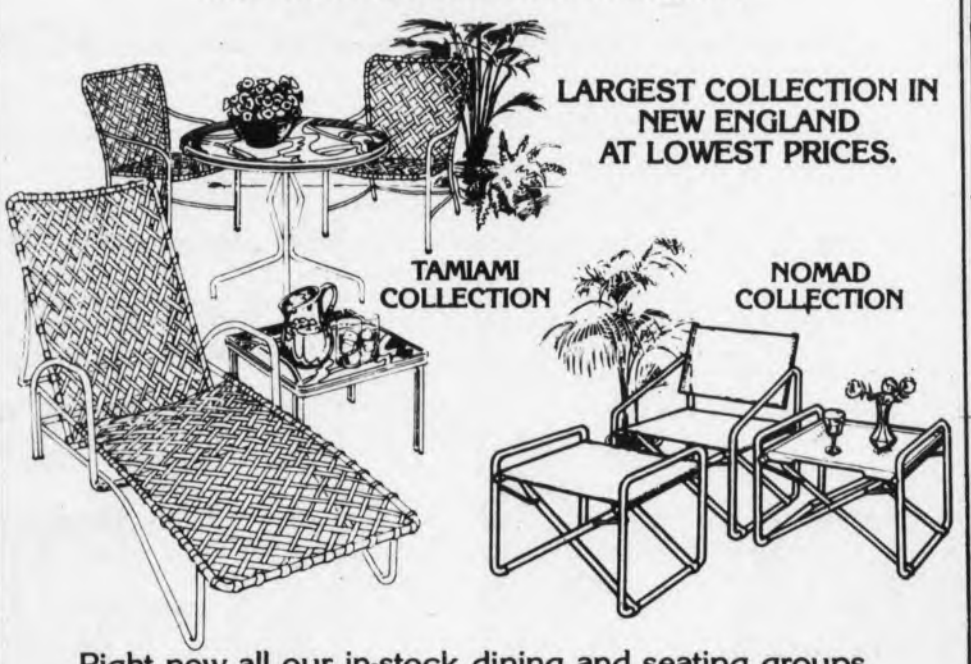
Travel Along with Evie Young



The major form of recreation on Conzumel, after beaches and diving, is shopping. Mexico has long been a bargain hunter's idea of a good time, and that is especially true now after repeated devaluations of the peso. Shop around the plaza and along the waterfront. You will find nearly all the items for which Mexico is famous. They include silver, copper, tin goods, pottery and ceramics, exquisitely embroidered dresses, blouses and shirts, handwoven serapes and blankets, rebozos (shawls), huarache sandals and basketwork. Start in the stalls of the "Mercado de Artesians," or Crafts Market, just behind the plaza. Conzumel is also famous for high-quality black coral, and though expensive here, it can be an excellent buy.

Public meeting set to discuss state home

By Theresa Sullivan

Selectmen will meet with state Department of Mental Health representatives in the board's first meeting after Labor Day to hear public comment on a proposed Intermediate Care Facility in Cohasset for the mentally retarded.

At last week's selectmen's meeting, Ted Lang, acting area director for DMH, and Cohasset resident Maria Plante outlined the details of the facility which will house eight mentally retarded adults on state-owned property off Route 3A.

The residents will range from 25 to 40 years-old. Two will be Cohasset residents currently in the Walter Fernald School and six others from nearby towns. The client-staff ratio will be two-to-one, Lang told the board.

The clients need constant supervision. The goal of the facility is that clients learn living skills and develop to the point where they are self sufficient, Plante said.

When a patient advances to a level where he needs less supervision, he will be released from the facility and a new client will be brought in, she said.

Selectmen asked about the safety of residents, in light of the site's proximity to Route 3A.

The site of the proposed facility is an acre of land on Crocker Street. The land was formerly owned by the state Department of Public Works until ownership was recently transfered to DMH.

Plante said the clients will be accustomed to institutionalized living and would be unlikely to wander off by themselves. Lang added the 24-hour staff-client ratio of two-to-one would insure clients' safety.

"They're not the type of people who will open the door and walk," Maria Plante said. Plante has been active in the pursuit of rights for the mentally retarded on behalf of her son Peter. She serves on the South Shore Assoc. for Retarded Citizens' board of directors.

The program will be run by a non-profit agency selected through competitive bidding. However, operations for the program will be funded by Medicaid.

Society summer walking tours

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold three Sunday afternoon walking tours to some of the town's most significant historical sites on three Sunday afternoons this year:

(1) At 3 p.m. Sunday, August 12, a guided tour will start at the Society's Maritime Museum, Cohasset Center. Walk along historic Elm Street (once known as "Ship Cove Lane") to see early homes of the 18th and 19th century. Continue along the edge of Cohasset Harbor where Cohasset's seafaring industry and fishing schooner fleets once were located. The old name for the harbor was "Ship Cove." Continue to Government IslandwhereMinot's Ledge Lighthouse was constructed to hear the fascinating story of the first and second lighthouses at the world's most dangerous ocean site off the shore of Cohasset. Return to the Maritime Museum for light refreshments.

(2) At 3 p.m. Sunday, August 26, a guided tour will be held at the Cohasset Central Cemetery where numerous old families of the town are buried. See the old "Burying Ground" and early slate markers of its early settlers. Followed by a "mystery" bus tour of one of Cohasset's most picturesque historical areas. Return to the Burying Ground for light refreshments.

(3) A walking tour will be held Sept. 9 at 3 p.m. from the 1747 Parish and Precinct Meeting House to historic Cohasset Common. Walk to Cohasset Center to see early residences. Date to be announced. All tours will feature tour guides from the Historical Society. Admission to each tour will be $1 per person. All are invited.

Meeting slated for state home

There will be no cost to Cohasset residents.

In an interview prior to the selectmen's meeting, Plante said the cost for the Intermediate Care Facility (IMC/MR) is much less than the $60,000 it costs per year to house one individual in an institution,

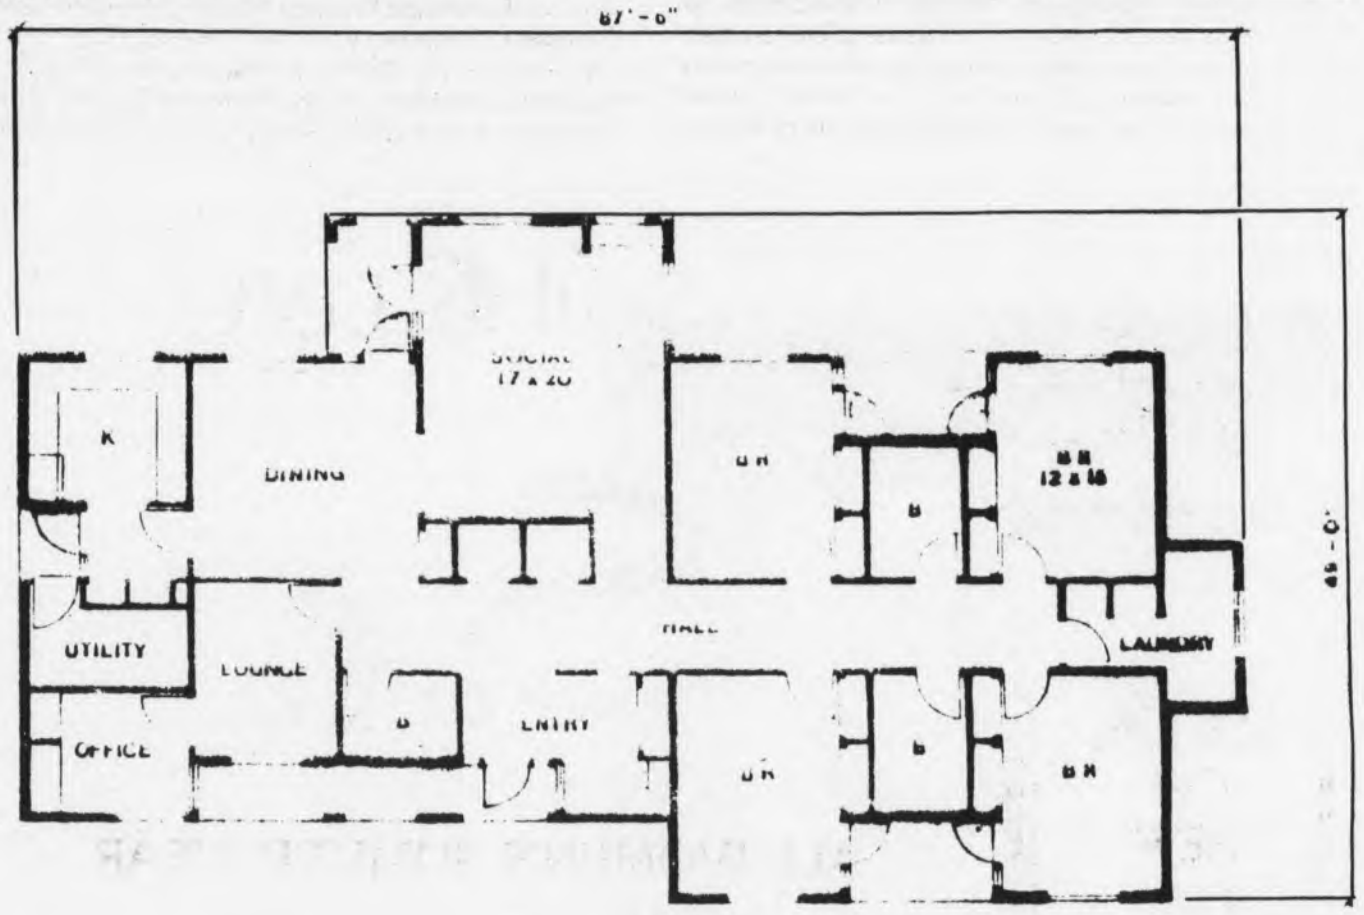
"Cohasset is the only town in the area that does not have one Department of Mental Health program. I'm making a personal appeal," Plante said.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle asked, "Is it unusual to build a building of this type for only eight patients? (Is it worthwhile to) spend the amount of money for only eight people?"

"What they don't want are mini institutions," Plante said.

"The goal is to build a small residence. That way you can provide the necessary staff ratio without overcrowding the facility," Lang said.

The facility is a four bedroom house, and will contain social and dining rooms, a lounge, kitchen, office, laundry room, utility room and three baths.



Laugelle asked how similar facilities were received in other communities and Lang said the facilities have been well received in the towns they are in.

"The neighbors are so thrilled with these people," Plante said. "They don't have their radios blaring, or beer cans on the lawn."

Referring to the clients, selectman Mary Jane McArthur asked, "Is this a step up for them?"

"Absolutely," Lang said.

Anyone interested in serving on the advisory committee being formed to oversee the project should contact the Coastal Area Ofice at 331-0927.

☐ Rose and Charlie Pape are grinning to beat the band lately! It seems that their granddaughter, Maria Eleana Basteri was in a field day at Kingston elementary school and was a grand winner! Maria won five ribbons in all; three blues and two third places. Great work for a fifth grader. What's more, there holds a lot of promise for the future . . . Rose loves going to all of the athletic events! We know where she and Charlie will be!

☐ Roy MacDonald had a grand day of golf at the Kittansett Golf Club in Marion, Mass. last week. Everything was perfect, even the weather.

☐ Bet Richard Yokum is so happy to be driving his own car (van) without a cage in the front seat! The story of his plight reached far-away places, even California . . . the way the story was worded in the reports made it humorous for many a reader.

☐ In mentioning Janet Dodd Dubois before, I neglected to mention that she is looking for Pen Pals for French children who are studying English. The French children are in the 13-14-15 year age range, and have three or four years of English behind them. Anyone interested? Should be a great project to start the summer. Why not give me a call if you think it could be good for your child.

☐ Seven of our CHS students recently took part in the finals of the second annual Bay State Games. More than 3,000 amateur athletes competed at various sites around Greater Boston during the four-day event. Freshman John Reddy competed on the Southeast region boys' scholastic soccer team. Janet DiGiralamo and Carla Lucas played on the Southeast region girls' scholastic basketball team (Bill Fallon, girls basketball coach was an assistant coach for the girls team). In girls' soccer Amy Duncombe, Jill Nedrow, and Sarah Seavey won silver medals on the Southeast girls scholastic team.

☐ A mother and daughter team also made the spotlight in the swimming contest . . . Carol Henry was the team coach for the Southeast region, and her team came in third overall. Annie Henry contributed to that grand total, winning a silver medal in synchronized swimming and a bronze medal in the 13 and older trio event. The swimming took place at Boston University.

☐ Todd and Suzzunne DeCruz are having a wonderful time this summer as all reports indicate. They are spending three weeks sailing at the Deer Island Sailing Camp in Deer Island, Maine. Mom and Dad just received word that they are having a wonderful time, especially meeting people from all over the country. Todd and Suzzunne sail in Pentecost Bay and camp at a different island every night. Sounds like a dream camp!

☐ Congratulations are in order for Lori Stover, a recent graduate of Southeastern Academy, located in Kissimmee, Fla. Lori Ann is now qualified for an entry-level position in all areas of the airline, travel or tourism industry, a business that is certainly booming!

☐ Gary Sisson is home for a while, with his wife and two children. Gary makes his home in Orcas Island, Washington, and is here so that his family may get to love the area as much as he does, or at least see what he has been talking about for so long! Needless to say, grandmother Ruth is delighted with the prospect of having them here.

☐ Another success story of a CHS grad, class of 1980. Chris Williams graduated summa cum laude from Yale, earning a BA degree in intensive music. Chris received a special award, the Friends of Music at Yale prize, in recognition of scholarship and creative imagination in the field of music. It is the first time the award has been given in several years, and it is given to a senior in any undergraduate department at Yale who has done distinguished work in an intensive major and for the finest Senior Essay or composition on a musical subject.

In addition, Chris was awarded the fine arts medal by Trumbull, one of Yale's 12 undergraduate colleges, in honor of consistent and outstanding perfection as a saxophonist and for many contributions made to Yale. Presently, Chris is studying at Tanglewood and the fall brings yet another honor as he was awarded a fellowship for Masters Arts PHD study at University of California, Berkley, in the field of musicology.

☐ Happy Birthday to Bert Pratt, who turned 65 last week. Bert claims he never felt better and one look at him gives proof of that fact. Bert, you look great and may you celebrate many more!

☐ You'll be seeing a lot of familiar faces in town this weekend, it is the Reunion of the Class of 1959. They even have teachers coming from all over the globe, and have gala events planned! Be sure to look for them, and extend a warm welcome, as do we all.

☐ Donna Magee just returned from the Democratic Convention, and I'll bet she's one happy gal! Donna has always been involved in politics, and to see a woman get the vice presidential nomination must have helped to make her work seem worthwhile!

☐ I would like to take the time to say a few words about Around Town . . . first of all, it is your column (i.e. your news makes it happen) so please call or write your news in. Everyone has an abundance of happenings in the summertime. Let us in on it.

Secondly, once in a while a school sends their news directly to the Mariner, which is then printed. When it is received directly from the school, it is assumed that it is fact, therefore it is on the record as being true. If there are any errors in the news reporting, either from a college or from this writer, please contact me and I will clarify and/or reprint it. Thanks, and keep your news coming!

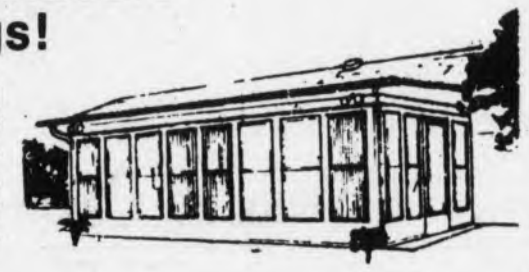
Congratulations are in order for the Braves, who won the Cohasset Little League Championship after compiling a very impressive record of 18 wins and three losses.

The team was led in hitting by Linc Marsac, Mike Ellingen and Mark "Animal" Batts. Consistant pitching was supplied by Steven Pozatek, while Jay Staunton anchored the infield at shortstop.

The Braves are expected to be very good again next year dispite the loss of four valuable 12 year-olds, Brian Shultz, David Farrag. Jay Staunton and Mike Ellingen.

The returning will be Katie Pyle, John Mitchell, Bart Weisenflue, Mike Cisineros, Mark Batts, Steven Pozatek, John Foley, John Gerry and Linc Marsac.



These are the Cohasset Little League Champs, the Braves.

A time for peace

The Elm Street fire station is not a happy place. Inside the bricks walls are shining floors, gleaming trucks, and unhappy men who are pivoting themselves against their chief.

Morale has shrunk to a dangerous ebb this summer. Many firefighters say they hate the sight of their uniform hanging in their closet. The idea of putting it on and coming to work is repugnant.

What happened to create such a desparate situation? The residents of this town will pay the consequences of this demoralized department. And the families of the Cohasset firefighters suffer too, as disgruntled, discouraged men arrive to and from a job they no longer view as their vocation. It's just a job now. A job they dreamed of as children; soured in the realities of adult experiences.

That the majority of the firefighters don't get along with or respect the chief has long been aired in public dialogue. But the chief, who has suffered through public ridicule as charges and grievances have been lodged against him, must bear this burden. At least for the year and a half remaining in his contract.

Until that time, and perhaps for years to come, firefighters and their estranged chief must come to a draw. The situation is simmering and residents are fearful of an explosion. Perhaps too much has been said, too many bad feelings and prejudices have been littered in newspapers and in public conversations.

It must be remembered that despite the harsh words and sentiments, it is the innocent who may suffer. If a public servant such as a police officer or firefighter doesn't give a damn, it may be someone else's life that becomes a consequence of their reactions.

In this time of turmoil, we ask both sides to come forward in a true effort to listen and understand each other. What merit can it bring to continue this hopeless confrontation?

It may be your family or other residents of Cohasset who will be the ultimate target of your anger and frustration. Don't let the innocent suffer by your steadfast refusal to seek what appears to be an impossible peace.

Vacation signs of the times

By Claire McDonough

Here it is mid-summer, and some of you haven't taken your vacation yet. Could you be having trouble deciding what to do?

I thought you might need some help making up your mind, so I dropped by Madam Zolar's chic little ashram on Third Cliff and asked her for words of wisdom.

After requiring me to cross her palm with several pieces of green paper bearing protraits of our beloved early presidents, Madam gave the following advice:

Aries (March 21 - April 19): You are at your happiest when telling other people what to do. It's probably too late to arrange to be a drill instructor at Parris Island this summer, but you might want to consider it for next year. Meanwhile, why not hang out in supermarkets and yell at people who take their shopping carts down the aisle the wrong way?

Taurus (April 20 - May 20): As a Taurean, you enjoy owning expensive possessions, but you get an equal kick out of impressing your friends and (particularly) enemies with your surplus of this world's goods. You can fill both needs by spending your vacation working in some exotic spot. Send post cards to everyone and make them think you've really blown a bundle on a big expensive vacation, and at the same time you get to keep the money you make. Deckhand on the QE2 would be ideal.

Gemini (May 21 - June 21): As you know, you are really two people, and it isn't easy to please both of you You might consider packing a supply of books you've been wanting to read, and bringing them with you on a white water canoe trip. If this should prove disastrous, the books will be a godsend while you're recovering in the orthopedic unit.

Cancer (June 22 - July 21): Cancerians love their home and family far more than trips to foreign climes. They also hate to spend money. Stay home and use all the "cents off" coupons you've been saving. Just be sure you don't go down the aisle the wrong way or an Aries might yell at you.

Leo (July 22 - August 21): You are at your happiest when receiving the homage you consider your due. Disguise yourself as Geraldine Ferraro and drop in at Democratic Committee meetings throughout the country.

Virgo (August 22 - September 22): A true Virgo is only happy when cleaning up someone else's mess. Send your family on vacation. You can stay home and straighten out their closets and bureau drawers, thus pleasing everyone.

Libra (September 23-October 22): Libras have a terrible time making up their minds about anything, but they do love romance, marriage, and honeymoons. Why not get married? Then let your spouse decide where to vacation.

Scorpio (October 23 - November 21): Scorpios don't like to let people know things about them, like where they are and what they're doing. You could have a lot of fun traveling around the world and sending your friends post cards signed "Guess who?" or "Sealed Lips."

Sagittarius (November 22 - December 21): Sagittarians love travel and adventure, so white water canoeing would be a nifty vacation for you. For heaven's sake, though, make sure there isn't a Gemini on board who plans to read while shooting the rapids.

Capricorn (December 22 - January 20): The success-minded Capricorn would do well to forego vacationing. Stay on the job and claw your way to the top while everyone else is away.

Aquarius (January 21 - February 19): Vacation time is prime time for zany, fun-loving Aquarians. Just be sure you select a place where the local police sympathize with people who tend to be, um, unusual. Judging by telecasts from the recent convention, certain parts of Los Angeles would be perfect.

Pisces (February 20 - March 20): Pisceans are th. easiest to advise of all. Phone the weather bureau, and pick a spot where you can be assured of rain every day, so you can spend your entire vacation feeling martyred and put-upon. With a little luck, you might even get a cyclone or a tornado.

Note To All Signs: The above advice was brought to you by a sun sign astrologer who couldn't think of anything else to write, and should be ignored. Have a nice summer!

A time for thanks

From time to time in these pages of the Cohasset Mariner we have been privileged to publish the beautifully detailed drawings of Cohasset's Richard Dabrowski.

It has always been, for each editor, like Christmas, unwrapping a special present, every time Mr. Dabrowski submitted his original art work. We would take turns in our Marshfield office, passing the sketchings around - wondering how he did it and marveling at such talent.

Mr. Dabrowski informed us this week that he will be moving to Kennebunkport, Maine. We, and his admiring neighbors throughout Cohasset, will miss him and his art.

He is a gentle man with a towering talent for art and for making and keeping friends. Remember us.

A need to preserve a sense of balance

To the Editor:

Cohasset's Board of Selectmen having voted four to one to demolish the stage and auditorium of "their" town hall on the grounds that no one but the Dramatic Club uses them, and having challenged the Dramatic Club to justify its continuing use of the town hall (and, in consequence, its continuing existence as an organization), perhaps the following comment is in order:

We all know of families who have chosen to settle in one town over another because of its beauty or its schools, or for its receational or cultural facilities (including such things as dramatic clubs), but who has ever heard of anyone picking a town for the size of its governing body or the number of its town boards and committees!

The point is, the Cohasset Dramatic Club is a town asset and has been for 63 years. Deprive it of a place to perform by eliminating the stage and auditorium, put the Dramatic Club out of existence, and the entire town will be the poorer for it.

And what about the 20 other organizations who depend upon the town hall auditorium? Instead of demanding that we justify our usage, maybe it is we who should be asking the town fathers to justify their appropriation of a facility that belongs to the whole town in order to accommodate governmental spread.

Mr. Blake, Chairman of the Town Hall Study Committee, has stated that conversion of the town hall to an office building "would take care of the needs of the town for the immediate future." Then what? What happens as new staff positions are created, more administrative personnel is added, additional committees and boards are appointed (and, incidentally, the cost of running the town is sent into orbit)? Inevitably, the government will outgrow the town hall and move onto more appropriate quarters. Behind them, they'll leave an unwanted surplus office building of limited usage, of service or benefit to no one.

Please, let's try to preserve a sense of balance as we offer recommendations for what we believe will be best for the town and its people. The destruction of the town hall stage and auditorium to accommodate the "immediate needs" of a spreading bureaucracy would be a tragic and irreversible mistake.

Breeding dishonesty

To the Editor:

Last Sunday night, July 15, as our family was watching T.V., our son's small sized blue ten-speed Raleigh bicycle was stolen from our driveway right by our front walk. My son though he saw the thief riding away but was too late to stop him.

This is only one of many bikes which keep disappearing in our town. They are being stolen by Cohasset kids and this is what disturbs us most. Trespassing is a common occurrence. Why can't we raise our children to be honest? I remember how astonished we were to hear our young daughter talking about the cheating she saw going on at the Osgood School. Cheating at the high school level was the one problem at the Cohasset High School which continually distressed our oldest son. What is wrong with our school system and our home environments which seem to breed this dishonesty?

This theft was particularly sad because the entire cost of this bike was paid for with our son's paper route money, and the bike has good trade-in value because he kept it in like-new condition. It will take a long time before he has earned enough money to buy a new bike to help him in delivering his papers and getting around town.

Summer is a wonderful time of the year but it is also a time kids get bored and look for some excitement. It's unfair for a young person to pay the price of a contemporary's idea of excitement. We wish whoever stole this bike would have the decency to return it and bring a bit of honesty back to our town.

year fixed disposal price at $12 per ton. That price option, among two other alternatives, is being contracted quickly by other towns. Cohasset will have to make a decision and sign a contract soon if the town is to take advantage of this price option.

Norwell was expected to sign a similar contract with SEMASS officials Tuesday night, he added.

The reason for the low disposal price is the advantageous contract negotiated between Commonwealth Electric and SEMASS to produce energy from the disposed waste materials. All three levels of disposal fees and all revenues from the SEMASS facility are structured around that 27-year Comm Electric contract, Tobey said.

DiMichele presented graphics to the audience, outlining why a SEMASS alternative seems to be the best route for Cohasset's future.

In the worse scenario, he said, Cohasset would convert the present landfill into a mini transfer station. Three compactor-bins would be located at the site, with concrete overhangs constructed atop two of the bins. A third open bin would be located to the right for disposal by trucks.

The compactors would then be hauled to the Rochester facility. Each bin would be capable of holding 11 tons. Cohasset produces an average of seven tons of waste per week, he noted.

Factoring in all inflation costs, interest rates, equipment life expectancy , and site preparation life, the committee determined that in 1987 (the year the SEMASS contract would begin), it would cost the town about $39 per ton for the landfill operation, compared to $47 per ton for SEMASS. The resource recovery system would include costs for the tipping fee, amortization of the equipment and site preparation costs, transportation to Rochester, no anticipated rebate to the town for energy produced by the waste materials, and $17 for transfer station.

By the year 2002, without figuring the costs of constructing a new landfill which would be imperative, SEMASS would cost the town about $75 per ton, as compared to a conservative estimate of $106 per ton for the landfill. That figure includes an anticipated $4 rebate to the town for each ton of waste disposed at the Rochester facility. Cohasset averages 4000 tons per year.

Construction of a transfer station at the Cedar Street landfill is averaged at $90,000, he added, including the concrete pads, the asphalt, electrical service, purchase of three compactor-bins, and construction of the I-beam and roof. SEMASS officials have also offered their assistance in planning the landfill conversion, Tobey noted. Operating costs of the station are more definitive, based on actual costs prepared by SEMASS. Annual operating costs in 1987 will average about $68,000.

Disposal committee member DiMichele argued that selectmen should proceed as quickly as possible, saying that town meeting approval is almost "academic" at this point. Since selectmen and the study committee agree in intent, and a contract should be signed soon, it might be impractical to wait for a fall town meeting, he said.

Murray's memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

Last week was characterized by a reign of insensitivity by Governor Dukakis over everyone in the Commonwealth.

As I reported to you last week, the Governor vetoed the $70 million income tax cut, denying all taxpayers - especially elders and low to middle income working people - their rightful share of our enormous surplus.

Later on in the week, the Governor went even further and vetoed the local aid amendment to the FY '85 budget, depriving communities across Massachusetts of an additional $31.6 million.

Local aid denied

After months of preparation, analysis, and debate, this local aid amendment was adopted by the House and survived the budget conference committee before being vetoed by the Governor.

It was a local aid increase without earmarking. Each community was to receive $35 per student (Grades K-12). Where and what it would be spent on was solely up to the descretion of each individual municipality.

Although this item has been vetoed, I want you to know there is presently under way a bi-partisan effort to recall the Legislature in order to override that veto and restore this much needed new local aid.

Taken Together

Taken together, the Governor's vetoes of both the $70 million tax cut and the $31.6 million new local aid package shows what little regard he has for taxpayers and citizens. He has declared war on us all. In essence, he is saying, "Do it my way or no way at all."

The facts are simple. The Governor is covering up the state surplus, which according to fiscal experts, is close to a quarter of a billion dollars. He is doing this in order to fund his pet project MassBank and the state take over of local public education - as was done with the welfare system. The welfare system take over resulted in a ten-fold increse in operating costs.

But, even if there was a billion dollars in surplus tax collections, the Governor would invent a way to spend it, rather than return it to us taxpayers in the form of a tax cut or new local aid.

Proud Cohasset Troop 28 recently visited the U.S. Capitol with a guide, Congressman Gerry Studds.

Troop 28 Boy Scouts

After returning from their trip to Washington, D.C., Troop 28 Boy Scouts had many exciting stories to tell about all the places they had visited. The boys stayed at the U.S. Army Base., Fort Meade, MD.

Among the highlights of the trip was a meeting with Congressman Gerry Studds on the U.S. Capitol stairs. Here, Congressman Studds not only greeted everyone, but presented a U.S. flag which had previously flown over the Capitol to Troop 28.

The scouts will be donating the flag to Cohasset at the next town meeting. The scouts saw Speaker of the House Tip O'Neil and the Senate Building.

The scouts laid a wreath tribute at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington National Cemetery. Michael and Nicholas LeLecas led the ceremony. A smaller wreath was laid at the J.F. Kennedy gravesite.

The scouts visited many historic places including Mount Vernon (George Washington's residence). Coincidentally, Scout Terry Combs is a direct descendant of Martha Washington. The White House, FBI tours and the Supreme Court were among the tours. The scouts saw millions of dollars being printed at the U.S. Treasury Department Mint. (Unfortunately, no samples were given). Many scouts enjoyed the Smithsonian's Air and Space Museum which displayed planes from the Wright Brothers to our present day space shuttles. They saw the Washington Monument, Lincoln and Jefferson Memorials, the Iwo Jima Memorial and Vietnam Memorial.

Thanks to the Cohasset townspeople and to all the others who supported the scouts for making this trip possible. By supporting the scouting functions such as their car washes, selling refreshments at the town meetings, the Cohasset Country Fair and Raffle, the scouts not only raised money for the trip but the remaining funds will go toward Summer Boy Scout Camp. The funds will provide one expense paid week at Boy Scout Summer Camp, Camp Child in Plymouth in July for those scouts who participated in the fundraising.

Craft fair

The Green Harbor Yacht club is sponsoring a Crafters Fair Saturday, July 28 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. It will feature quality crafters from the South Shore area. The fair will be held at the club on Dyke Rd. (Rte. 139) in Green Harbor.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

Ever since horse-drawn conveyances first started to meet the train from Boston at the depot to deliver passengers to their hotels or summer homes, our seaside towns have been a haven for vacationing artists, golfers and fishermen. Nowadays most of the country meadows and farms that lured them to our area have given way to malls and condos. The little stands that dotted the roadside have nearly vanished. Native Marshall strawberries were sold at most Marshfield street corners, asparagus and peas, the new potatoes, bouquets of zinnias and glads, all made their appearance as the summer progressed. Even little boys set up lemonade stands and card tables in the front yard offering surplus tomatoes and cukes from the garden. Having abandonded our vegetable patch to the foraging rabbits and woodchucks, my search widens for the little new potatoes so perfect for this recipe of Suzanne Bates called simply

GREEN BEAN AND POTATO SALAD

Steam 3 lbs. new potatoes, let cool slightly before quartering. In large bowl combine the potatoes while still warm with 1/3 c. dry white wine and 1/3 c. tinned chicken broth, tossing the mixture gently with rubber spatulas. Let stand for 20 min. Drain off any remaining liquid before tossing mixture again with 1/2 c. French dressing and 3/4 tsp. each of summer savory and basil. Chill potatoes, covered, for at least 4 hours. In a saucepan steam 1½ lbs. green beans cut into 1" pieces until just tender. Pat beans dry with paper towels, transfer to a bowl and chill, covered, for at least 4 hours. Add beans to potatoes, season the salad with salt and pepper. Transfer to salad bowl. Serves 8.

A passing glance at the calendar brings me to a screeching halt. Can it really be the last week in July? Why is it that winter drags on and on, when summer is so fleeting? Though this summer has been its steamiest, beaches often too hot for comfort and the ocean so icy it's torture, on the other hand, gardens are at full tilt and vegetables their most delectable. For most of us, the days of ripe tomatoes, still warm from the sun-drenched vine, can't come soon enough. A good barbecue dish to serve 10 would be these

HERBED CHERRY TOMATOES

In a large skillet melt 3T butter over moderate heat, stir in 1 T dried basil and cook the mixture, stirring, for 2 min. Add 3 pints cherry tomatoes, rinsed, stemmed and patted dry and cook them, tossing them, for 5 min., or until they are heated through.

Summer gatherings and cool wines go together, with jug wines just about perfect with anything that's been charcoal broiled. California jug wines are fairly inexpensive and an article I was reading the other day suggests a simple red wine with your hamburger such as Gallo's Pink Chablis or Vin Rose. The manager of a Front St. liquor shop in the Harbor said the fastest-selling jug wine in their shop during the summer season is Gallo's white Chablis Blanc—perfect for sipping on a hot evening. The buyer at Gregory Pine Acres says more and more people are learning about wines and customers know jug wines are inexpensive and these generic wines are always going to taste the same because they are a blend of various grapes, whereas the varietal wines vary from year to year. Gallo's famous Hearty Burgundy is always popular and a lot of wines imported from France, Italy and Germany are a good buy with today's dollar value. A glass of white wine would make Pat Connor's dish even more enjoyable. It's called

CHICKEN WELLINGTON

1 pkg. Pepperidge Farm patty shells, thawed
6 oz. long grain wild rice
1/4 c. grated orange rind
2 eggs, separated
3 whole chicken breasts, boned and split
1/8 tsp. each salt and pepper

Roll each shell between waxed paper into rectangle about 5 x 7". Set aside. Cook wild rice as directed, adding rind while rice cooks. Cool. Beat egg whites until soft peaks form. Fold into cooled rice. Season chicken with salt and pepper. Place a split chicken breast on each rectangle; top each with 1 oz. of rice. Fold dough around chicken and rice mixture, tucking all sides under, then sealing edges with water. Brush each pastry with beaten egg yolks. Place on ungreased baking pan, approx. 3 to 4" apart. Bake at 375° for 45 to 55 min., or until crust is golden brown. Serves 6.

Sue Allmendinger called to say her amaretto custard cake turned out a disaster, so please don't try the recipe in last week's column until Milly Carr recovers from surgery and can straighten us out as to what went wrong.

League plans three debates for congressional race

By Ted Blaszak

In an effort to keep the public informed of the issues The League of Women Voters will sponsor three debates between U.S. Congressman Gerry Studds and the five opponents seeking his seat in the upcoming election.

The first debate will be held here in Hingham on Sept. 7, the second in Barnstable, Sept.9, and the third in New Bedford Sept. 11. The debates are being held within two weeks of the primaries on Sept. 18.

Democratic opponents seeking their party's nomination have expressed concern that the timing of the debates is unfair.

Both Peter Y. Flynn and Christopher Trundy, Democratic contenders for Studds' seat, said that that the debates may be too late to sway undecided voters.

According to recent reports, Flynn spokesman, Keith Westerman said "It seems to me that Studds doesn't want to debate until the last minute."

Westerman also accused Studds of dodging public appearances and avoiding debates.

Peter Fleischer, campaign manager for Studds, said in response to the accusations " we don't have any say over the timing (of the debates). If anyone has any questions they should talk to the League of Women Voters."

Fleischer went on to say that Studds' election committee wrote the League requesting the debates occur on June 5, and that Studds was the first candidate to take such action.

Studds was in Hingham last week for the 19th round of town meetings he has held since his election in 1972. Studds refused to discuss campaign issues at the meeting.

According to League representatives, the debates were planned close to the primary to assure maximum press coverage and voter interest.

In Hingham and in New Bedford, the Democratic and the Republican challengers will all share the stage with Congressman Studds. In Barnstable, though, there will be two separate debates, one for democrats seeking their party's nomination and one for republican candidates.

The candidates will answer questions from reporters, the audience, and Representatives of the League of Women Voters.

Both Trundy and Flynn felt that the debate should be held in open format with the candidates asking each other the questions. They also felt that they should not have to share the stage withRepublicans in the first two debates. The Republicans seeking nomination are David Struhs, John Bennett and George Donovan.

Kathy Reardon, co-president of the Hingham League of Women Voters, has stated "It would be nice to have two separate debates, but its a matter of how many of these things you can pull off."

Reardon is presently in Washington D.C. for a conference on planning the debates, and said in a telephone interview that no details have been planned as of yet.

In pursuit of meaningful trivia

By Lois Martin

It is the minutiae of our lifescape that intrigues. We have conquered finite understanding of how a porpoise communicates, how we will design our space cities and the intricacies of raising nuclear vegetables.

The little things, though, are more puzzling:

—Will they ever make an affordable picnic basket again? Every since they decided eating sandwiches with ants was an elitist activity that would sell well among the chic, the rest of us haven't been able to afford the basic picnic basket.

Manufacturers would be well-advised the wealthy didn't invent the picnic. The rest of us have had paperbag lunches all our lives and now we want to be able to buy a decent picnic basket.

PATCHES

—Next month soviet newspaper editors are visiting our area. I was all excited when I read about it and I hastily offered my home and hospitality as a host American newspaper person. The organizers asked nothing about my cooking ability or the cleanliness of my sheets, let alone about the newspaper. I have missed this opportunity because I don't speak Russian. But we might have had a far more meaningful communication in our native tongues.

—The pleasant grandfatherly man who does the Purity Supreme commercials is shown outside with a platter of meat for a hot summer barbecue. But he's still wearing his sensible maroon cardigan buttoned up. Wish they could give him a summer shirt.

—I'd like to cut out quiche on menus. We've overdone it just like we have rice pilaf. It's ladylike to eat quiche. Put the hot roast turkey and gravy sandwiches with stuffing on the side back on the menu. And they could take all the yogurt to the moon for all I care. I might eat real butter out of a cute container but never yogurt.

Something has to be done about thievery of Sweet & Low, and other sugar substitutes in coffee shops. A lot of restaurants don't leave those out. You have to ask for them. They say women steal them, not the regular sugar, just this kind.

—And would it be possible for the paper towel dispensers in bathrooms to issue a sheet of paper that dries more than two fingers?

—Those Cabbage Patch dolls. Someone said they should make cole slaw out of them and I'm not sure that's out of line.

—Oh, Vanessa, Vanessa, what price glory . . . and at what cost the crown . . .

—Boy George. I'm not so nervous about him as I am about his mother. I've wondered what I'd do if I learned through People magazine that my son dressed up in outrageous outfits and did a better job putting on more make-up than I did.

—To show you what you're missing in your hometown newspaper . . . some British papers provide a multitude of nudie photos . . . comely women only.

—There's a new fad perpetuated by some companies that ask you to dial a catchy word instead of numbers. Personally, I have to concentrate to dial "CAKE."

—I voted for the Bottle Bill so America could be more Beautiful . . . and I try to remember that worthy ideal each time I see my bottle stash piled up waiting to be returned. It really is a comfortable habit to sling stuff. Tough to make a comeback from a throw-away habit.

—Nothing makes one more fatigued than to be told she looks tired.

—Moving boxes mate far better than socks do.

—If we're looking for a way to turn enmities around, we have only to arrange a convention. Look what friendships and commitments have blossomed at the Democratic one in San Francisco last week. Men who said they had nothing in common three months ago are of one mind now. Impressive.

—It takes a real woman to interview a Patriot's cheerleader and not come away hating her. Character is what's needed to forgive those lithe size 3 (toddler) their perfections. A lesser woman would have held her down on Sullivan field and forced her to eat a sundae.

—When they fashion car air conditioners that don't blow directly where you're ticklish in your neck, I'll like them better.

—I wonder if church attendance has plummeted since we said it's okay to shop on Sundays. That's now a boom day of the week for retailers. And I haven't heard anyone complain about it since we started. Are we not so nice as a society if we shop Sunday? Doubt it.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

Saltwater

Bluefish are the best bet for local anglers. Schools of blues are feeding heavy all along the coast, especially in Cape Cod Bay and on South Cape beaches.

Striped bass are still being caught by local beach fishermen on night tides. Large swimming plugs and chunk mackeral or pogies are best bets.

Fluke are on all sand bars at the mouth of rivers, bays, and inlets, feeding on large schools of sand eels.

Cod are offshore several miles and 8 to 14 oz. cod jigs, baited with clam necks, have been taking good numbers of 10 to 15 lb. fish.

Cool water temperatures have kept flounder fishing steady in most sandy bays and harbors. Boston Harbor flounder grounds are still producing some nice catches.

Tuna have been on Middleground and Stellwagon Bank all week feeding on squid, mackeral and pogies. Rod and reel catches have been good with fish over 700 lbs. not uncommon.

Freshwater

Hot weather has slowed down the freshwater action this week with most bass being taken in the evening on top water lures, jitterbugs, hulapoppers, and spinner baits.

Trout have been slow. All ponds are warming up and fish are in deep water.

Fly fishermen are enjoying good action with small popping buoys for panfish, bass, perch on local weedy ponds during early morning hours. Frog pattern bugs and poppers are best colors to use.

Commentary on 'Uncommon Women and Others'

By Jeff Giles

In 1982, "Uncommon Women and Others" was Cohasset's entry in the Massachusetts High School Drama Festival. Even shortened to forty minutes, the play was swift and stirring and crafted with enough wit and insight to win a spot in the state finals.

As a reporter covering the finals in Boston that year, I remember one thing quite clearly about Cohasset's entry: Michelle Shea's desperate telephone monologue which provided an appropriate, as well as enormously disturbing climax to a play about sex, friendship, and the future.

I remember how a tiny dot of a girl in a monstrous auditorium hushed an entire crowd and tormented it with the stark, creeping sadness of one of the festival's most memorable scenes.

When Michelle Shea folded her fur coat across her knees and reached for the phone in the Cohasset Drama Workshop's summer revival of "Uncommon Women" this past Saturday, I cringed and sank down in my seat.

But there is something very different about this year's production of Wendy Wasserstein's play. Aside from restoring the work to its rightful length, Director Ron Emmons, Cohasset High's newly appointed Director of Dramatic Arts, offers a theatre-in-the-round presentation with seating on stage limited to about 50 people.

By positioning the actresses only feet away from the crowd at some points, Emmons not only captures more of the intimacy of college life but also heightens the sense of claustrophobia which plagues many of the characters as they attempt to chart out life after Mount Holyoke.

"Uncommon Women" marks the seventh summer Ron Emmons has worked with students of Cohasset High, both past and present, in an effort to generate some capital for school year productions. Because the Drama Workshop breaks even, at best, with most shows at the high school, Emmons often finds it is these summer pieces which give the group a little more financial freedom.

But more important than that, events like "Uncommon Women" provide students with a creative outlet in the middle of a long, hot summer or a chance to rekindle interests and talents which may have fallen to the wayside during college.

This year's cast reads like a Ron Emmons All Star Team. He has successfully brought together many of the best actresses that Cohasset High has produced for the past five or six years. Meri Fink's performance as Rita Altabel the high-spirited, would-be novelist is effortlessly perfect. Nancy Walls and Disa Pratt, playing Muffet and Kate respectively, alternate smoothly between pride and vulnerability and help express the play's concern with the role of the working woman in society.

Simply by nature of the script and the size of the cast, "Uncommon Women" can be a difficult play to watch. Sympathy, even pity, is demanded by virtually every character and, because the scenes change quickly, it is often hard to focus attention on any particular one. It is for this reason that a character as simple and mindless as Carter, played by Sarah Muir, is so refreshing and delightful.

The play can be a genuinely funny one yet it is a selective, intellectual brand of humor. As Mr. Emmons has suggested, Wassersteins's work is certainly not geared toward younger audiences who might miss references to Freud and Wallace Stevens.

In all respects, "Uncommon Women" is demanding of its audience. It craves sympathy, anger, and understanding; it moves through fear and frustration and ends with a plea for faith and hope. And that creeping sadness pervades it all.

But the demands of "Uncommon Women" are eagerly met. It is a rewarding play because each of the actresses has put more than a little bit of herself between the lines. For many of the girls, the questions of marriage, career, and college are hardly new ones. The concerns, the fears: they are as universal as ever.

Once upon a time, not so far away,

a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.

Now it's coming true again.

All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

"DENTAL FACTS"

The following dental health information is provided by
HARBORLIGHT FAMILY DENTAL CARE,
member of the American Dental Association
and the American Academy of Dental Group Practice.

ARE LEAD SHIELDS NEEDED DURING X-RAY EXAMS? During any X-Ray exam, a very small amount of radiation is scattered around the room. A lead apron is used to protect the patient's body from this "scatter radiation." In dentistry, the amount of "scatter" is very small because the X-Ray beam is kept narrow by a device called a "collimator." The Bureau of Radiological Health of the Food and Drug Administration requires that all x-ray equipment manufactured since 1974 meet a rigorous radiation safety standard. There are different types of x-rays used in dentistry. The most common is the bitewing, used to detect cavities between teeth. A Panoramic film shows all the teeth and surrounding bone on the large X-ray. A special machine is needed for this procedure.

For further information, contact Harborlight Family Dental Care.
Consultations are free of charge. Next week's topic—TOOTH BONDING.

Cohasset summer sports scene

By Lisa Shumaker

Cohasset Swim Team

Friday the Cohasset Swim Team lost to the Duxbury Aqua-Dux in a tough meet 263 to 304. However, this score does not reflect the number of close races and superb performances during the meet.

Cohasset's divers performed beautifully. In sixteen and under diving, Erin Powell came in second, and Jane deLima picked up a first. In twelve and under diving Katie Lord was second, and Madlyn MacDonald came in first. Unofficial divers, Cindy Dormer and Amy Russel also showed tremendous improvement.

In individual swimming events, Cohasset's first place finishers were: Sara Bishop (two firsts), David Leahy (two firsts), Becky Golden, Niffy Jackson, (three firsts), Brooke Anderson, Matt Brown, Topher Henderson, Ian Knox, Alix Knox, Julie Bowdoin, Cindy Spooner, and Jon deLima.

Cohasset's second place finishers were: Matt Brown, Eric Karcher, Ian Knox, Tim Conroy, Emmy Tague, Cathleen Buckley, Chip Anderson, Jay Staunton, Julie Bowdoin, David Leahy, Becky Golden, Bily Baird, Madlyn MacDonald, Adam Douglas, John Jackson, Topher Henderson, Sophie Redfield, Brooke Anderson, and Sara Bishop.

Third place finishers were: Dan deMichele, Caitlin Staunton, Matt Buckley, John deLima, Annie Henry, Megan Staunton, Topher Henderson, Sophie Redfield, Jay Staunton, Dawn Fitzgerald, Jason Marsac, Greg Julian, Kelly Chase, Joel Whitman, Cathleen Buckley, Andrew Firestone, Linc Marsac, Liz Buckley, Danny Baird, Cindy Spooner and Kate Anderson.

In this meet Niffy Jackson broke a CSC pool record by 2.57 seconds in the girls 10 and under freestyle. Her time was an amazing 29.09 seconds!

Cohasset had a good showing of team support, and everyone showed great effort. This Friday, Cohasset hosts the Scituate Knights of Columbus team. The meet begins at 1 p.m. at the Cohasset Swim Center. Come cheer on your home team! They work hard and deserve your support!

The stars of the week for week three are: Andrew Firestone, Brendan Mulligan, Dan deMichele, Stacy Pierce, Billy Bair, Eileen O'Connor, Jason Marsac, Jennifer Martin, Greg Julian, Amy Hobbs, and Katie Lord.

Freshman Girls Basketball

Monday, the girls defeated Whitman/Hanson in a tough battle 44 to 34. Cohasset was tested until the end. However, in the third quarter Cohasset ran their fast break well and opened up the game.

Great hustle by both Maria Cahill and Susan Riley combined with the excellent offense of high scorers, Maureen O'Leary and Maureen Farren to give Cohasset the victory. The key to the game was the outstanding defense played by Cindy Spooner who shut down Whitman/Hanson's best player.

The girls remain undefeated in the Marshfield summer league.

Eighth Grade Boys Basketball

Wednesday, the boys crushed a weak Whitman/Hanson team 41 to 25. Great team passing and hustle by Cohasset gave them the win. Cohasset remains undefeated in the Marshfield summer league with an overall record of eight wins and no losses.

Against Whitman/Hanson Chris Watters made an excellent offensive contribution. David Shumaker had a great game blocking seven shots and pulling down a ton of rebounds. Ronny Massa also turned in a good effort for Cohasset.

Junior High Girls Basketball

Last Monday the girls lost to Marshfield 39 to 11. Kerry Kirkendal was Cohasset's high scorer with six points. Tuesday, Cohasset was beaten by Whitman/Hanson 30 to 10. Cohasset had no shooting in this game.

Monday, Whitman/Hanson beat Cohasset in a disappointing loss 17 to 18. The girls showed a strong desire to win and played outstanding as a team overall. The team's rebounding and shooting was much improved in this game.

High scorers for Cohasset were Lizzy O'Leary with seven points and Debbie Hartley with five points. Nancy Riley showed much improvement and rebounded very well for Cohasset.

Cohasset All Star Soccer

This past spring over 225 Cohasset soccer players participated in the Coastal League Soccer Program along with ten other neighboring towns. The teams consisted of players ranging in age from eight to eighteen. From this league the following Cohasset players were selected to the Coastal League All Star Teams and will play other All Star Teams from various leagues in Massachusetts this summer: Katie Lord, Alexis Bowen, Deserree Yess, Susan Riley, Caitlin Staunton, Karen Anglin, Jill Nedrow, Amy Duncombe, Joel Reidy, Jim Reidy, Todd Fitzpatrick, Chris Kirkendal, and Bob Shultz.

In addition to the above, Kerry Kirkendal, David Shultz, Kevin Leary, and John Reidy were selected in state wide competition to represent Massachusetts on the state select teams.

At teachers' request

High School attendance policy revised by committee

The school committee Monday night approved revisions to the high school attendance policy, to alleviate what teachers have termed "rampant tardiness"and attendance problems.

Saying the "teachers are fed to the nines" with unexcused tardiness and absentism at the junior/senior high school, the committee submitted and adopted several revisions to last year's attendance policy.

The revisions are aimed at controlling unexcused tardiness and absences from the classroom. Although the committee adopted the revisions, based on the need expressed by the faculty senate, the committee was not in total agreement about that need.

Committee chairman Joseph Nedrow said he was opposed to "spending an awful lot of time to penalize 95 percent of the students to solve a problem caused by five percent of the students."

Member Richard Conley disagreed with the intent of the new attendance policy, saying "we have not set an attitude - we want them in school with the right attitude. If in the long run, we continue to have chronic absences and we can't correct it, then we should pursue this course. But we are now putting the punishment first."

Members Jack Langmaid and Diana Kornet, who worked together to formulate the revisions, said they undertook the project at the request of the faculty. And it was the administration, Kornet explained, that asked that detention be brought back.

The revisions adopted by the school committee included procedural changes for tardiness and absences, and the penalties for unexcused absences.

Among the more prominent changes is a provision that parents notify the high school attendance clerk by note or telephone call before 2 p.m. that the student will not be attending school that day. This is followed by a note from the parent the day the student returns to school. Langmaid said staff members were in support of the double verification process.

Although a telephone answering service was reviewed by the committee as a possible method to alleviate the heavy load of calls coming into the school, that system was rejected as expensive and non efficient.

All notes upon the student's return must be given to the attendance clerk, not the homeroom teacher. And upon a suggestion from Langmaid, the school administration will establish a new procedure when students return back to school. They will receive a ticket from the attendance clerk, stating their absence has been excused. The student is then free to go to class and talk to the teacher about making up missed classwork. Without the proper ticket, the student will receive zero for the classwork he missed.

Another revision stated that all unexcused absences and occurrences of tardiness will result in a student's inability to participate in an after-school activity that day. The committee also suggested that athletic team

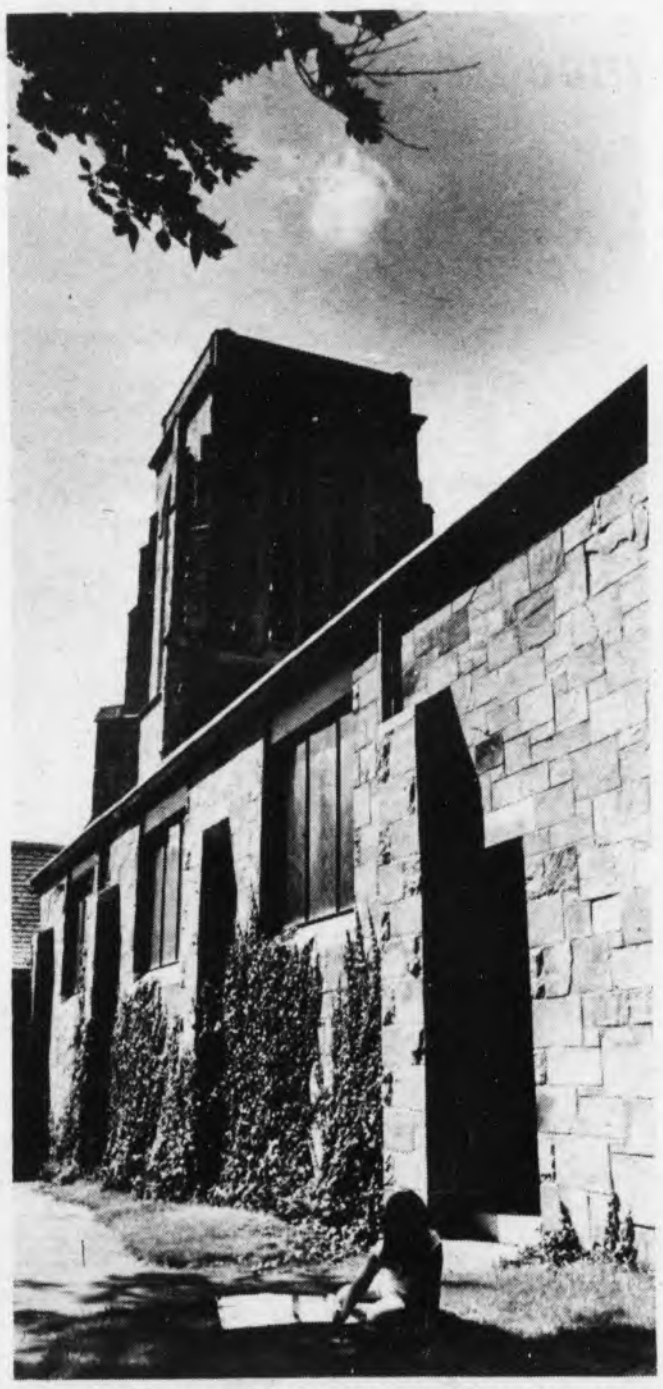
Eliopolous pleased with stay

The two and a half years she has spent in Cohasset have not been without some turbulence. But Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous, who is resigning the end of this week,is not dissatisfied with the time and experiences she has shared here.



A diminutive woman, Elaine is not eager to accept confrontations, yet she is strong-willed and will not surrender to views she believes are incorrect.

She admits that more tact could have been utilized in some instances, but in most cases, Elaine is pleased with the manner in which she conducted herself in her capacity as an official representing the town.

When asked to describe the past two years here, she replied,"All of the above. At times, this job has been rewarding, exciting, frustrating, and difficult. It had really high and really low points. But overall, I am happy that I took this position and that I came to Cohasset."

Since Elaine announced her resignation last month, she has received calls and visits from townspeople, expressing their support and gratitude for the immense responsibility she took upon herself two years ago. She wishes that people could have talked to her earlier, times when she needed conversation and support. Still, she is walking away from her office this week with a confidence built upon hard work and the knowledge she performed always as a professional.

A sense of peace and intimacy

(This article relates writer Jeff Giles' impressions of the Sunday Carillon recitals at St. Stephen's Church. Ed.)

She knows how I am with children. No one has less patience with zippers and sweaty Red Sox jerseys or fewer answers to those giggling, breathy questions about the universe and beyond. I don't know why a television works. I don't know how they got the Common Pond to look like a YMCA toilet bowl.

She told me Jay and Aaron were good kids.

When the three of them got in the car on Pond Street, she looked a little more like a babysitter than I though she would. She had one of them in each hand, already bribing and blackmailing them with bedtime and Papa Gino's. The younger one peeled some vinyl off my dashboard and told me "Bill and Andy" were his friends and that they lived in his stomach.

It was then I started thinking that a St. Stephen's Carillon Recital on Cohasset Common might be the wrong place to be.

But at four o'clock on Sunday it was just warm enough to lie back on the grassy common and forget the dull patter of their little feet. With the pond bubbler gurgling away and the rumble of airplanes shaking the ground, I had no idea they were dipping their sneakers in the water or throwing rocks at my sixth grade math teacher's dog.

Before long, the common was dotted with suntans and sunglasses. Alone, or in twos or threes, they slumped down against tree trunks or slipped back into lawn chairs. A tie came off here and there; blankets were shaken into the wind and some sandwiches got passed around.

Suddenly, everything got quiet and a couple dozen heads were buried in their programs. And somewhere in a dimly lit tower, I suppose, the Belgian composer/performer/professor Aime Lombaert cracked his knuckles and prepared to set the oak levers jumping.

The first notes came like softly muted bells, quiet then harsh, chasing down the register, one after the other. They sprang up and fell and echoed out in the shop-cluttered streets.

Jay and Aaron, sitting in a tree, were charmed. They hardly moved for almost an hour.

And whether it was the music or the sun and the nudging breeze, a delightful New England calm crept over the Common. Lombaert moved swiftly from Chopin and Mozart to Gershwin, Glen Miller, and the Beatles.

The trees shook once in a while and a car engine muttered off in a parking lot.

Each piece, from the Flemish folk songs to traditionals like "Auld Lang Syne," had a sense of peace and intimacy to it. Even when the music was loud and crashing like a thunderstorm from some Gothic horror movie, the sight of St. Stephen's peeking out over the trees was somehow comforting.

For over an hour, the 51-bell carillon gave the scattered crowd a moody and colorful musical tour of its five hundred year history.

It has been all summer. Every Sunday, St. Stephen's features artists from all over the world, each eager to display his or her own catalogue of talents and perform a striking variety of works.

Future players come from as far as Denmark and the Netherlands and as close as Connecticut and Pennsylvania.

The carillon was originally a gift from Mrs. Jane W. Bancroft who was a parish member for many years. The bells themselves were cast in England, installed in 1924, and expanded in 1925 and 1928.

When a carillon player presses a lever, a clapper is in turn triggered which strikes the bell mechanically. As a result, the dynamics of sound can be carefully manipulated and each melody given its own character and intensity.

The last recital for the year will be Janet Dundore, Sept. 9.

The kids and us drove home quietly. After about twenty minutes, the final stragglers began to wander off, blankets and briefcases in hand, still staring up through the trees.

Cohasset's week . . .

Residents may register to vote in the September 18 state primary election on the following dates. Registrations will take place at the Town Clerk's office at Town Hall.

Tuesday, August 14 from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Hazardous waste barrels

The Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) ordered several industrial barrels situated behind the fire station removed by a special hazardous waste removal company.

Zecco Inc. of Northboro was sent to the Elm Street station to remove the barrels which had been located behind there for many years, according to Fire Chief Martin Dooley. Apparently, materials including engine oil, paint thinner, grease and other types of industrial oil were leaking from the barrels after last week's rainstorm. The danger became apparent when the chemicals leaked from the barrels into the stormdrain. The health agent contected DEQE which immediately ordered the containers removed by a certified company.

According to Chief Dooley, the waste barrels had been located behind the station for many years, long before he arrived in Cohasset. The fire department had planned to dispose of the 12 barrels during a townwide hazardous materials disposal day scheduled this fall. But after representatives from the federal agency examined the materials contained in the barrels, they ordered the immediate removal.

The town will have to pay the cost of transporting nd removing the materials to an out-of-state hazarious waste dump.

The jubilant all female cast rejoices during last week's "Uncommon Woman and Others" at CHS.

Ward sewer plan reaction

R. Murray Campbell, a longtime, vocal critic of the Ward Engineering wastewater disposal plan, devised an 80-page printed report which details the "myths, mistakes, and misrepresentations" the town accepted in seeking an alternative sewer plan.

Entitled, "The Sewer Follies of Cohasset," Campbell has attempted, in exacting detail, to outline why Cohasset residents were "duped" into approving the Ward Plan, and why the town would be better served by the originally-acepted Metcalf and Eddy Plan.

The report which was professionally typeset at a cost to Campbell of $500, includes subtitles, "Political/ Technical Mismatch;" "The Selectmen's Mistake," "Funding Delusions," "The Myth of the DEQE (Department of Environmental Quality Engineering) Caprice," and copies of letters pertaining to the town's search for an innovative and alternative system.

A nuclear engineer, Campbell, who is a Canadian citizen, completed this project, "because I have lived here for 25 years and I care very much about this town." The report took Campbell five weeks in his spare time to complete. Copies were sent to the local and Boston newspapers, and all elected town officials.

Campbell has written voluminously regarding his opposition to the innovative and alternative sewer system. He has been an advocate of a central sewer plant, a direction specified in the 1979 Metcalf and Eddy report. It was through misinformation and misstatements, he said that the town finally rejected the M and E Report and began the long search for an alternative system.

The Old Pasture Road resident said the result of Town Meeting's decision in June to accept the Ward Plan will result in further court action and delays in construction of a sewer system. The net result, he added, is that the Ward Plan will not save the town money for virtually the same system.

He begins his report by stating, "the observations aren't just Monday morning quarterbacking - the game is far from over... The price of folly, whether from ignorance of the issues, or from prejudice that does not accommodate non-conforming information, will be high. The price is paid not only in immediate cost, but in the frustration and irritations of a badly-conceived and inadequate system, and ultimately in the future cost of correcting deficiencies - perhaps by then building our own plant."

According to Campbell, there are several misconceptions involved in the recently-approved Ward Plan, among then, he noted, "is that the 300,000 gallons per day limit to Hull is too small for the area to be served by the Ward Plan as amended at Town Meeting (to include the Route 3A business area), whereas the Metcalf and Eddy plan readily accommodates all phases."

He also noted that it was a mistake on the part of selectmen not to allow voters a chance at the June Special Town Meeting to return to the Metcalf and Eddy plan. "The town should have continued to make objective comparisons, as would any well-run business. The comparisons peddled by the Sewer Commission were wildly inaccurate."

He continued, "perhaps the vote would have been to proceed with the Ward Plan, given the hype, misinformation, the abhorrence of the M and E Plan, the uninformed who still think we can escape cheaply, the decentralized few who see the merits of the M and E Plan as greater than those of the Ward Plan, the devoted gaggle of lemmings for the Ward Plan, the late hour, etc."

Campbell also questioned the "funding delusions" incorrectly assumed by the Sewer Commission throughout its search for an alternative system. Rather than 94 percent funding for on-site repairs, as advocated by the commissioners, Cohasset should expect nothing, he said. "The June 13, 1984 letter from DEQE states clearly that funding for the individual on-site rehabilitation will not be provided for on the 1985 priority list because limited available funds will be allocated to major treatment and collection systems."

Discussing the "Hull Connection," Campbell argued that "Hull must demonstrate intent - by appropriation of funds and by other actions - to make costly corrections as outlined in a report by Black and Veatch and a report by Camp, Dresser and McKee.

The Hull plant has far more serious problems than Eliopolous leaves with a challenge for the future

Elaine is leaving Cohasset to pursue a law degree in Boston. After many years of pondering a future in environmental and public health law, Elaine will confront this new challenge in September. With a Master's degree in Public Health, specializing in Health Service Administration, she brings a strong academic background with her.

Originally a psychology major at Emmanuel College, Elaine entered a Master's program at Yale and interned at a state mental health facility. It was "happenstance" that she later saw a job advertisement for director of Public Health in Dracut, and accepted an offer for employment there. "I found the position very interesting and stimulating, and I liked the problem solving and technical aspects of the job,"she said.

After a year there, for no particular reason other than it was "time," Elaine left that post and decided to travel abroad.

"I was just 22 years old then, and I had a position of much responsibility which I took seriously. It was the first time I was in a position financially where I could afford to travel, and I knew there would be plenty of time later to pursue a career," she stated.

Alone, she traveled to Europe, India, Nepal, Bangledesh, and through North Africa, although she later met and traveled with "a cast of characters." She was gone from America and the land of job responsibilities for two years.

She recalls the extended adventure as "personally enriching," which, she added, was a necessary fling away from more serious pastimes.

After two years, her financial resources evaporated, Elaine returned home and started looking for a job. Although she had other employment opportunities, she decided on Cohasset.

Her reasons were simple. "I was impressed with Cohasset geographically. This is a beautiful area. I was also impressed with the members of the Board of Health. They impressed me most with their policies, attitudes, and priorities. I think I made a good decision."

She remains a strong supporter and advocate of this present three-member Board of Health. And they in turn have supported her throughout the past two and a half years. She acknowledged that without their continued encouragement, she may not have weathered some of the storms so well.

Elaine Eliopolous

Elaine leaves with "no regrets" for her actions as Cohasset's professional health agent. The situations in which she found herself involved, and her reactions to them "were always motivated by my concern for public health," and no personal satisfaction was gained by public altercations.

"I don't consider the politics of a situation," she said, although she admitted that may have often proved the less abrasive course. "My concern was always that things were technically and environmentally sound. The basis of my recommendations to the board of health was always what I felt to be technically correct," Elaine added.

She laughed as she recalled being labeled "feisty" when she first arrived here. She enjoys the connotation, as long as it is perceived in the positive sense.

"I don't like confrontation, verbal or physical. But I am not easily intimidated. This is not to say that I can't learn from an engineer or surveyor, but they must expect that when I feel something concerning a technical issue is very important,I will fight for it," she noted.

A deeply private person, Elaine candidly admitted she acquired this quality from her mother, whom she described as 'incredibly feisty." Raised in Tyngsboro, near the New Hampshire border, Elaine's mother "is a very strong woman," who recently earned a master's degree and is a social worker.

Despite the publicity surrounding a number of her "confrontations," Elaine held up a facade that all the negative situations did not affect her. Her work did not suffer, she is glad to state, but the struggles within her professional life sometimes scarred her personally.

"I would not have let the confrontations bother me so much," she said in reflection, "if I could have learned to take things less seriously. But this is a very serious, important position. If I have learned anything, it is that it is not personally productive to allow things to bother you."

When asked if she felt she matured during her stay in Cohasset, Elaine replied, " I have certainly aged. When I came here I was full of energy - very excited and ready for whatever came along."

She is proud of the many accomplishments attained in cooperation with the Board of Health. During her tenure here many residents have told her she was most helpful in guiding them to the proper town department or board. She hopes she has made government more accessible to more people - a goal she will always aspire toward, Elaine said.

The 20 residents in Cohasset who have licenses to hold animals on their property have a strong rapport captains could obtain a list of all absent or unexcused tardy students, and inform the coach of their inability to participate in practice or a game that afternoon.

Attendance policy revisions . . .

The committee also supported a revision which would mandate a detention period after school for all unexcused tardiness. Langmaid said it was their intention that if a detention was to be held before the conclusion of the eighth period, the session could be presided over by a teacher aide. Administration officials and Deer Hill principal Kenneth Ekberg disagreed with the notion of allowing an aide to preside over a disciplinary action meted out by a teacher.

Supt. Eugene Crowell said the faculty has suggested they would not be opposed to supervising detention halls on a rotating basis.

If a high school student is tardy at the outset of the school day, he or she will check in with the attendance clerk and then report directly to the detention hall. He or she will remain there until the next class period. And any student who is up to five minutes late for a class, will be assigned to detention after school.

Another revision states that a parent must present a written note if requesting an early dismissal for a student.

Committee member Conley said he could not support the adoption of the new attendance policy without input from students. Student Council representatives said they have a meeting scheduled Friday during which they will discuss the policy. The school committee said it will review the revisions again if the students indicate the need for further changes.

School department appointments

The school committee appointed several department heads, although the superintendent will determine whether the positions need annual approval or are tenured.

The committee was set to make several appointments, when the question was raised whether all interested staff members apply for the positions. Crowell noted that although the positions are posted annually, "it is a foregone conclusion that if a man or woman has performed the service successfully for some years, he or she will be re-elected."

Committee member Diana Kornet wondered if the chairmanship of a department should be decided on a rotating basis. Langmaid concurred, saying he would not like a qualified person overlooked because the appointment is "a foregone conclusion."

Crowell, who was unsure whether the position becomes tenured, will speak with the teacher's association representatives about the situation.

with the outgoing health agent. She makes annual inspections of the properties, and has advised owners, with the common goal of maintaining healthy, well-kept animals.

Elaine also found that the Board of Health is a tremendous resource for residents. People have called with an endless supply and variety of questions during the past two and a half years. Queries as to why so many raccoons are in someone's yard each night, how can someone get rid of squirrels in an attic, or why so many puddles are formed in a neighbor's backyard, are just some of the puzzles Elaine has tried to solve for curious individuals.

Elaine is also proud of her strict, no-nonsense enforcement of the health codes. A quick response from her office has also been a major accomplishment she has attained here.

For Elaine, it will be another stretch of academics, another challenge she is eagerly anticipating. And more people than she realized will be thankful for the brief time she gave to her profession in Cohasset.

While touring Italy, many people visit Florence to see Michelangelo's "David" on their way to Venice after Rome. However, they often become so captivated by the City of Botticelli and the Medici that the stopover becomes a week of sightseeing. If Venice is the perfect union of art and unique natural setting, and Rome the union of art and religion, then Florence is art and money. Its great bankers, especially the Medici family, financed Florence's great architecture, paintings and sculpture. Florence is the home of the Uffizi, now the most important art gallery in Italy. The monumental "David" is the centerpiece of the Galleria dell' Accademia. The Pitti Palace features major works by Raphael, Rubens and Titian and others too numerous to name.

Risky Business?

"You have to manage your risks if you want to stay in business," says Philip Mason of the Doran & Mason Insurance Agency, in Whitman.

All businesses involve many risks. With a family business those risks are especially serious. Could yours be wiped out because a risk — one you're not even aware of — isn't covered?

According to Mr. Mason, "The first step in managing your risks is to know what they are." Fire, flood, windstorm, personal injury, and crime are only the most obvious risks. "We know where to look for risks and we can show you the best ways to deal with them."

"Doran & Mason is a large, independent insurance agency. That means we can place your insurance with the companies whose coverages just match your needs, and," Mr. Mason pointed out, "our size makes us important to the companies, so we can really help when you have a claim. It also means that we have a full professional staff to give you expert guidance and energetic service, when you need it."

"We're a family business and we realize how devastating interruption of income and loss of investment can be to the people who depend on it."

High school athletic policy

It was policy night at the school committee Monday night as the junior/senior high school athletic policy was presented by athletic director Clark Chatterton.

Saying the athletic program at the school is suffering from a "great problem of (lack of) committment" from the students, Chatterton reiterated the policy that a student may pratice or play only once in any day. This is a state mandate, he added, instituted to avoid over-

Mariner Musings

☐I really admire Walter Mondale for the straightforward manner in which is he dodging the issues.

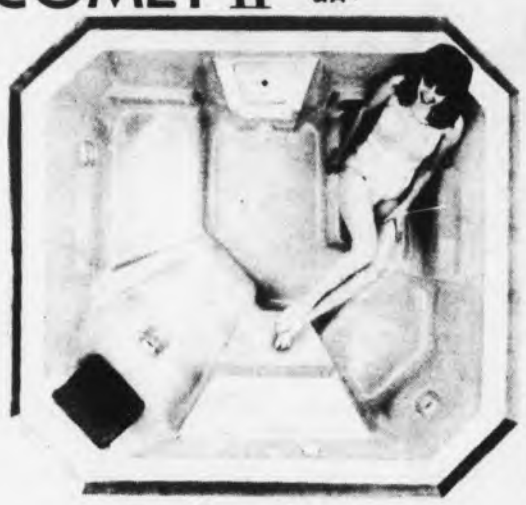
☐Remember, gentlemen, men first up ladders.

☐As I said years ago, there are four stages of intoxication: jocose, lachrymose, bellicose and comatose. Years ago I had an interesting discussion on this topic with Ernest Hooton, the great anthropoligst. He disagreed when I said, "Liquor intensifies your mood. That is, if you're feeling sad, liquor will make you feel sadder and if you are in a happy mood, liquor will make you feel happier."

☐An old chestnut: When Hooton was walking down the street, he spied a black-haired lady pushing a red-haired baby. "May I ask, madam, what is the color of the baby's father's hair?" "I don't know," replied the lady. "He didn't take off his hat."

☐Ronald Reagan may not be the best president the Republicans ever elected, but at any convention he is certainly the best receptionist.

☐A Democracy is a nation in which everyone has an equal right to feel superior to his peers.



☐While it is important to build character, it is usually more important to rebuild.

☐ Special get well wishes are extended to Frank Infusino, who is home recovering from a recent hernia operation at The South Shore Hospital.

His grandson, Joey Andrade, had some good news to cheer up the recuperating patient. Joey, who will be entering the fourth grade was named, "Mr. Hustle" at the South Shore Basketball Camp he recently attended.

☐ Hear Therese Lennon is having a marvelous time touring France. After two weeks visiting Paris and Normandy, she is off for St. Tropez on the Riviera. Not a hard way to spend a vacation!

☐ Christopher Williams, son of Robert Williams of Alexandra, Va. and Jean Williams of Cohasset, is attending the Boston University Tanglewood Institute.

Christopher, of 96 Jerusalem Road, is participating in the Saxophone Seminar. The Yale University graduate is a member of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, the Yale Concert Band, and the Yale Jazz Ensemble.

☐ Navy Constructionman Paul V. Emanuello, son of Marjorie and Paul Emanuello, Sr. of 49 Hull St., recently departed on a deployment to Okinawa, Japan.

He is a member of Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 133, based at Gulfport, Miss.

While in Japan, the Seabees will be tasked with 44 construction projects at various military sites throughout Okinawa. Projects range from airfield repairs to pier and building rehabilitation.

☐ Bridget M. Farren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Farren of Cohasset, earned Dean's List recognition for the spring semester at Simmons College in Boston.

☐ When you are six years old and get an opportunity to go to your first Red Sox Game, that's a thrill you never forget. Just imagine Timothy Eisenstadt, who attended a double header against the Los Angeles Angels, and wound up being the "Coke is it" kid! It seems that spotters for the Coke Company go around looking for a youngster to be chosen for the day, then the boy really gets the royal treatment. Timothy's picture was taken with a polaroid camera, then flashed on the scoreboard during the seventh inning stretch (it seemed to be "everywhere"). After the game Timothy was invited down into the locker room to meet the players and received an autographed baseball. Wonder what will happen when he goes to his second game!

☐ Jennifer Jackson, 9 Woodland Drive, placed third in New England in the Long Course Age Group Championship meet at Harvard University this weekend. The Championship meet was held at Blodgett pool where Jennifer swims for Bernal's Gator Swin Club. Sixty teams represented the five New England states with over 1,000 swimmers. The meet ran from July 18 to July 22.

☐ Two local window washers, Zarmog the Window Man and Crazy Otto the Gutter God, held their third annual periwinkle roast recently. Called the aqua Boogiethon, lots of periwinkles were eaten, as well as different contests played. Mud wrestling was a grand event of the day, it was pouring buckets so it wasn't hard to find the rain! They also held a hat contest, and elected Kristen O'Brien Miss Periwinkle for 1984. It is reported that Christie Brinkley and Tom Selleck were asked to attend, but declined because of the bad weather. They even had a drawing, with a ginsu knife and radish peeler for prizes, but the winning number had left already . . . if you are the owner of ticket number 165361, get in touch with either Zarmog the Window Man or Crazy Otto the Gutter God.

☐ Everyone has been reading about Wendy Ann Devin, alias Valery Skvorsov, but did anyone remember her at Cohasset High School during her Russian student-hockey player "act"? She spent a lot of time with some of the coaches and athletes, and she even managed to "lift" one of the hockey shirts from the pile of returns at the end of the season . . . a lot of us remember!

☐ The Class of 1959 had "the best reunion yet, with no class able to match it" last weekend. It was held at the home of Jim and Linda Wallace, and it was three days of grand fun and many memories. It's always fun to hear people "come home" and how much they still love Cohasset, no matter where they may be now! The weather (predicted to be terrible) was grand, the company devine, and the sleep definitely lacking, but it won't soon be forgotten.

☐ The Little League Champs are the Braves and we congratulate them. Coached by Tim Marsac, the team should be "awesome" again next year, as they are only losing four players. Brian Shultz, David Farrag, Jay Staunton and Mike Ellingen are leaving but coming back to bat next year are Linc Marsac (who won the batting title on the team), Katie Pyle, John Mitchell, Bart Weisenflue, Mike Cisineros, Mark Batts, Steven Pozatek, John Foley and John Gerry.

☐ It was nice to have good weather so that people could surround the Common to listen to the Carillon recital last weekend. Sure is a popular event!

☐ Just thought I'd let you in on a secret, especially if you are to be in Mrs. MacDonald's fourth grade class next year. She makes the best blueberry cake!

☐ Two Cohasset soccer players were chosen to represent us in the Olympic Soccer games held at Harvard last weekend. Bob Schultz and John Reidy had the honor, and judging by what was shown on television, it was an honor indeed.

☐ That's it for this week, please call with your news to make my news possible!

Campbell slashes Ward plan

are recognized in Cohasset... to base its sewage future on such a plant, with so many unanswerable questions, is as foolhardy as selecting the sword of Damocles as the main element of the ballroom chandelier."

Campbell noted that in addition to the questions surrounding the contract with Hull, there are more immediate questions about the reliability of the Hull plant and "the limitation of 300,000 gallons per day that limits expansion of Cohasset's sewered areas and will place unbearable water use restrictions on those areas now intended to be sewered."

Throughout the typewritten report, Campbell sprinkled his dialogue with cynicism and disbelief that the Ward Plan will serve Cohasset's needs at a more efficient cost. He warned that "the cost of delay will be even greater if the Hull connection is not consummated, and the town is then required to honor its Agreement for Judgment, and construction of its own plant. The delay may have reduced the available funding so that the Ward Plan may cost Cohasset $3.2 million instead of the $2.8 million - or about the same as the M and E Plan would have cost."

The inflationary factor built into the delay of the M and E Plan would probably conclude in a $5.4 million price tag for that option, he figured.

Campbell predicted that "nothing good will happen" because of the constant delays in funding and construction of an alternative system. It is his hope that through this report and his continued battle against the Ward Plan, "wiser, cooler heads will prevail." Campbell predicted it will be many more months before construction is initiated, while costs continue to escalate.

Selectmen vote to close Island gate

Selectmen voted two weeks ago to lock the Government Island gate at 10 p.m. and open it at 5 a.m. The board chose 10 p.m. as a closing time to correspond with Sandy Beach's closing time of 10 p.m.

This brought on a discussion among board members about the problem with teenagers drinking in public places because they have no place to go.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur said she spent two nights observing young people and found they were drinking alcohol in public. "I'll tell you it's a serious problem. It's going on everywhere — Sandy Beach, the town parking lot.

Parents attending the meeting said many parents are unaware of what their children are doing. One mother said if a police officer catches a minor drinking and takes away his alcoholic beverage, the police officer should notify the parents.

"I don't think we can depend on the police department to inform parents," McArthur said.

Selectmen decided to have Police Chief Joseph Kealey attend a selectmen's meeting and discuss the problem.

exertion and to provide athletic participation by more students. Any student, according to the state law, who violates this rule, shall be declared ineligible for participation in any high school sport for 45 days.

A local rule adopted several years ago and still in effect, is that in order to qualify for a letter, a student must participate in 25 percent of scheduled games, periods, matches or meets and complete the scheduled season. Chatterton said this is where the most objections are voiced by parents who wonder why their child won't be awarded an athletic letter.

"If the parents are going to take the student away on vacation during school time and the student misses games, he or she doesn't get a letter. So many kids were away this year on vacations, we were down to a skeleton force (on many teams)," Chatterton explained.

Even if the student is excused from academic classes because of a family vacation, that does not excuse him from missed athletic games, he added.

There are no athletic games scheduled in any Cohasset league during school vacations, he said. The problem is that in this community, families take an extended vacation prior to the regularly-scheduled school vacation period, he noted.

Of no importance

Some observations of no particular importance during the dog days of August:

The common looks so pretty and peaceful, soft breezes waving through the green leaves of the trees that line the pond. But what's the story with the pond? A lot of the litter is gone from the water, but who threw in the Tidy Bowl? How did the murky waters suddenly turn an antiseptic shade of green?

It seems as if everyone is gone on vacation. As a newspaper, this is particularly distressing, attempting to contact people for story information. Cohasset is one of the most plush, attractive areas around. Why do people vacation away from here?

Summertime is a time for informality. Elected officials usually attend public meetings, traditionally attired in suit and tie. Women wear all sorts high fashion. But in the summer, off come the ties, buttons are no longer fastened around the neck. Sandals and sneakers are the fashion rules as comfort dictates costumes.

How come we never see any break dancers hanging around the streets of Cohasset? Where's your sense of fun?

You know you're getting old when you are having a perfectly decent conversation with a perfectly normal young adult and suddenly they gasp and sputter as they look down into the newspaper.

"Oh no! I can't believe this. Boy George (I knew he was a rock star) bleached his hair and grew a beard. I'm so bummed."

"I didn't know he had it in him. I think it makes him look a bit, and I use this term loosely, masculine."

"But he was so cute before. I mean I really liked him before."

"Gag me with a spoon. Please."

Joggers always look so distressed. Sweaty, puffing, just plain exhausted. What an advertisement for exercise. As soon as I see a jogger smiling, or better, whistling, I'll join him.

And the more they jog, the more fanatical they become. "I just have to go out and run five miles tonight." And you see them struggling home, straining for each breath as they pull into the driveway. Hey, looks like a fun way to spend some spare time. No thanks.

Well, here we are in the middle of a summer heat wave. The kids have just ruined another shirt when they spilled a quart of red-dye Kool Aid over the entire front portion of their body. You rush out to the store to grab something on sale that might endure the remainder of summer vacation.

Silly you. This is August now. There aren't any summer clothes for sale. Winter coats, wool mittens and long underwear are a great buy now.

You enter the store, sweat dripping down your back from a five-minute ride in the car. You enter the store and are faced with the prospect of knee socks and flannel lined jeans.

The choice is not too difficult. But I hope the kid doesn't melt this week in his new turtleneck sweater.

Cable is coming to Cohasset. Soon, residents will be able to turn to Channel 3 for a really exciting series "Highland Street Blues," starring our own Board of Selectmen. They have been busy taking acting and voice lessons from their neighbors in Scituate. Some of the do's and don'ts they have been taught by their professional peers include: don't fall asleep into the microphone; no wigs, toupes, false noses and moustaches, or crowns; and be courteous to all invited guests speaking to the board - others are watching now. But there is no truth to the rumor that Cliff Mitman will introduce each guest with a hearty, "Come on down!"

'Does that baby need to be changed ?'

By Claire McDonough

I read recently that for every woman who is married, at least 12 would like to be married.

I have no idea whether that's true or not, and in any event math never was one of my strengths, but I decided it was good for a pretty fair conversational gambit.

"Do you realize," I asked the Dragon, "that 57 thousand women would like to be married to you?"

"Really?" he looked startled but vaguely pleased. "Be specific. Name names. And how do you think I ought to feel about this?"

That's one thing I have to say for the good old Dragon. He does value my advice. He consults my opinion. He never makes a decision on his own.

Well, maybe some decisions. Like whether to sell the house, or buy a car, or if Skipper should be allowed to ride his moped to Maureen's house in Rockland. But for the day-to-day questions that crop up with regularity, I find my opinion is not only wanted, it's positively pursued.

I first noticed this during the early days of our marriage. The Dragon shook the salt cellar over his steak. Then he held it to his ear and shook again.

"Is this salt shaker empty?" he asked me seriously.

I held it over the back of my hand and shook. "Yup," I replied.

He continued to seek my advice.

"Well then," he said earnestly, "Don't you think you ought to fill it?"

His reliance on my judgment has continued unabated over the years. I recall many an occasion when I was wakened by a shake of the shoulder and a plaintive, "Is that the baby I hear crying?"

"No," I would snarl, groping for my slippers, "it's Paul Newman begging me to fly to Zanzibar with him."

"Oh," he would reply, snuggling happily back into the quilt. "You weren't asleep, were you?"

His willingness to involve me in all decisions affecting the well-being of our children was just as real during our daylight hours.

He would watch a malodorous infant climb onto the livingroom sofa, then seek me out.

"Does that baby need to be changed?" he would inquire.

"For what?" I would mutter. "Make me an offer."

During the course of a 30 year marriage, I've collected a goodly number of advice seeking questions. Like, "Do you think the rug should be vacuumed?" "Are you planning to wear that (small shudder) dress to the party?" "Does my shirt need to be ironed?" and my all-time favorite, asked while he was staring into an open refrigerator, "Do I want a sandwich?"

So when he asked how he should feel about the 57,000 women who would like to be Mrs. Dragon, I wasn't surprised, I was prepared.

"Flattered," I told him, "and somewhat threatened."

"Right," he agreed somewhat unhappily. "A man could go crazy from all that advice."

Shame to destroy historical facility

To the Editor:

Cohasset is discussing the conversion of the Town Hall Auditorium and Stage to Town Offices. I have to express some thoughts.

First — The main thing that bothers me is the destruction of the main part of a historic building which is in turn an important part of the Town itself. As one Selectman said "This Auditorium and Stage is Cohasset " It's part of the history of the Town. It played not only a major role in the growth of the Dramatic Club but more than that in the growth and development of citizens, people, individuals in the Town and what is more important than a human being? With this growth came the Town itself. To repeat the words of the Selectman "This Auditorium and Stage is Cohasset."

Why must we destroy a historical and beautiful stage and auditorium — forever — to solve an office space problem for the moment? And just that idea — for the moment — was expressed by the Chairman of the Town Hall Study Commitee Himself when He said ". . . this building is adequate to take care of the needs of the Town for the immediate future.

Second — Office space needs. Why this need for two additional floors of offices? If the need does exist (which I question) then look closely at the existing space and rearrange it to more efficient use. At the same time look at the basement as storage and related uses. And if it is felt that it is absolutely necessary to consolidate other Town employees in this building (which I question) then consider an addition to the rear end of the building.

Third — Usage. This facility - Auditorium and Stage, irreplaceable at any reasonable cost - is used by a wide variety of organizations and individuals.

The Dramatic Club - many times a year.

The Village Fair - all five churches.

The Recreation Commission - far too many activities to mention here.

Town elections.

Meetings of various Town Committees open to the public.

School activities and functions.

Miscellaneous social events - political and non-political.

To sum up my thoughts. It seems a downright shame almost obscene to destroy a beautiful, historical facility which is used by a wide variety of individuals to solve temporarily a rather mundane problem of office space.

I feel that this proposal should be seriously re-examined with the basic idea of preserving the Auditorium and Stage as they are and solving the office space problem in other alternate ways.

Town Hall unique

(The following letter is a letter sent to the Cohasset Selectmen)

Cohasset Town Hall space needs have been studied for years; the most exhaustive study, completed just a few years ago, did not recommend elimination of the Town Hall stage and auditorium. That study recognized the unique place that exists there in the life of this community. There is no other place in town large enough, or appropriately equipped and available, for non-school gatherings, productions, dances, etc. It is a myopic decision to convert the entire first floor to office/meeting areas.

We all know of the Dramatic Club's superb use of Town Hall stage and auditorium space. Its productions enrich our community; how demeaning that some selectmen dismiss its cultural contribution by implying that the Club intrudes in a town office building. The Dramatic Club is one group; many others use the hall weekly; even daily. The Recreation Department holds a variety of exercise and dance programs, and special children's vacation events at the Town Hall. The Community Center uses the hall for dances and movies when its own rooms have been too small, and numerous fairs, antique shows, and other special events sponsored by local churches and organizations such as the Art Center, are held in that same Town Hall. The building has a rich history because it contains the open hall area; more importantly, it is a vital and busy center of community activity at the present time.

The future of the Town Hall may also be the story of the future enhancement of Cohasset's special character.

We have a growing population of interesting and talented residents. This town should be planning to expand, not decrease, facilities for cultural, recreational and community offerings. It would be foolhardy and a false economy to eliminate an auditorium and well-proportioned stage which is currently utilized and appreciated by many, many townspeople; future replacement of this space will be very expensive in dollars. Not to have this space at all in the future will be costly in terms of town community life and Cohasset's atmosphere as an enriching, vibrant locale.

Town Hall has thrived as community's center

By David H. Wadsworth

Cohasset's Town Hall, constructed in 1857, served its community well for 70 years in its dual capacity as town office building and center for community activities, when it was radically re-designed during the 1920's.

Replacing the two assembly halls called the Upper and Lower Town Halls was a single high-ceilinged auditorium equipped with the most modern stage and theater facilities, suitable for a diversity of uses by the town's various organizations. As part of the renovation a movie projection booth was installed at the mezzanine level and a small ticket booth built in the entrance foyer.

The building's original second floor was raised to its present height to house Cohasset's town offices. To reach them the broad central stairway at the front of the building was replaced by today's narrow, winding stairs. Exterior changes included construction of a peaked roof over the front mezzanine's original flat roof (still visible inside the building above the Selectmen's office) and the redesigning of some of the windows at the front of the building.

At about the same time, the adjacent Second Congregational Church, having suffered a damaging fire, was similarly altered in appearnce. During the year of the Town Hall's alteration Cohasset's Town Meeting had to be held under a canvas "big top" put up on the Common nearby.

When remodeling was complete, the town possessed a first class municipal assembly hall ready to be used for a variety of purposes. Below the hall's stage was a kitchen complete with gas stove (still there) to provide for banquets. Community organizations were quick to take advantage of their new facility.

The Cohasset Dramatic Club, Cohasset's community theater, presented plays in the Town Hall since 1921, and now availed themselves of the new improved stage. The Boy's Club of Cohasset and the American Legion both held amateur boxing matches in the hall, and beginning in 1928, a succession of local entrepreneurs applied to Selectmen for permission to show moving pictures in the auditorium, a tradition which lasted for many years.

In 1932, Helen Linehan's Dancing Classes met in the Town Hall, and the Dramatic Club hosted an evening of one-act plays presented by themselves and visitors from the Hingham Player's Club and the North River Players in competition for the Lawrence W. Barrett Dramatic Trophy.

Flower shows frequently graced the hall, and a professional resident summer theater company, the South Shore Players, made its appearance on the Town Hall stage beginning in 1934. The Players stayed until the 1950's, presenting for local audiences some of the best known actors and actresses of the time.

Today's South Shore Music Circus in the lineal descendant of that summer theater which tread the boards of the Town Hall stage for many years. By the mid-1930 Cohasset's summer Carnival, sponsored by the three churches on the Common, began to use the Town Hall annually. In 1939 Selectmen granted permission to the Cohasset Historical Society to place a steel cabinet in the building's cellar vault for the storage of valuable historical documents.

The outbreak of World War Two saw a change in the mood of the townspeople as Cohasset's efforts turned towards the winning of the war. At the Town Hall, blackout curtains were installed to guard against possible enemy bombing attacks, and the town's Civil Defense headquarters was established, manned by volunteers for 24 hours each day. Town Officials drew up an evacuation plan for Cohasset should the need arise to remove the citizens from approaching danger, and town-wide air raid alerts were practiced at night to test the effectiveness of Cohasset's blackout procedures.

The Town Hall played the role of Command Post for the town's war effort through years of the global conflict and became the focal point for activity in support of Cohasset's Servicemen overseas.

With the end of the war in 1946 the town made a return to normal conditions and the auditorium again became the meeting hall for a diversity of more peacefully-oriented community organizations.

October 19, 1947 the big hall became the site of a local couple's gala wedding reception.

By the decade of the 1950's the Cohasset Women's Club was a regular user of the hall for its monthly meetings. Bridge and whist parties, High School plays, barn dances (one held by a group known as "Bundles From Home"), the Parent-Teachers Association, the Village Fair, and the Grange all were users of the Town Hall, as was the Baptiste School of Dancing.

The Second Congregational Church School and Men's Club held events in the auditorium, and the South Shore Film Society presented foreign films there. The Cohasset Girl Scouts, the Knights of Columbus, the Christian Science Church and the town's Historical Society also are on the list of organizations using the hall, along with the Republican Town Committee, the Community Center and, in 1954, the Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles. The Cohasset Dramatic Club, now with more than 200 members, began producing three major productions per year on the Town Hall stage. The summers of 1950, 51 and 52 saw the Brattle Theater Company occupy the hall for presentation of, among other serious dramas, plays of William Shakespeare.

A full century has passed since the architects of Cohasset's Town Hall bent their efforts to provide the town with a truly useful Town Hall designed to serve both government and citizens. The building has proven itself to be ideally suited for its intended purpose, in the tradition of New England Town Halls. Today the 19th century New England Town Hall is an endangered species among architectural forms and our town has one of the few remaining.

The long and illustrious career of the Town Hall on the Common deserves consideration whenever the fate of the building hangs in the balance; not the least of its importance always has rested in its ability to serve Cohasset's residents as an aseembly point for the creative energy of the town's own community organizations.

Last, but not least, thank you Cohasset High for one terrific year.

Dr. Mika departs Cohasset for Scituate

A former Cohasset High School science teacher was chosen by the school committee to be the Scituate High School assistant principal in charge of curriculum and program development.

Dr. John Mika of South Weymouth was selected by a committee chaired by SHS Principal Dr. Eleanore Gowen and School Supt. Dr. John Kulevich.

Fifty-four people applied for the position and a committee composed of Gowen, current assistant principal John Moretti, a parent, a guidance counselor and a SHS teacher, through interviews, narrowed 16 semi-finalists to three.

Mika, who along with Moretti and Dr. Gowen, will make up the administrative team, was given a one-year contract of $32,500 effective Sept. 1. But Mika has agreed to begin work in August and has already visited the high school several times.

Dr. Gowen was elated with the choice and said Mika's experienceand abilities will add another dimension "so vital to the educational process."

"His recent experiences parallel my own. Based on curriculum development and evaluations, he will be invaluable," she added.

Dr. Mika will be working with department chairmen and creating an overall program offering, especially in math and science. He will also discuss recommendations with a faculty curriculum committee and oversee student activities and general supervision.

When Dr. Kulevich first proposed the second assistant principal position to the school committee, he said the curriculum leader could also assist in curriculum development for the K-12 system.

Mika has a 1984 Ph.D doctorate in Curriculum and Instruction from Boston College, a master's degree in Natural Science from Boston State College and a bachelor of science degree in Biology Education from Duquesne University.

He has been a science supervisor and has taught Biology, Chemistry and general science for Grades 7-12.

While at Cohasset High, he designed an advanced placement biology program which served students interested in medical careers, helped to implement an individualized science curriculum study program and coached varsity tennis, cross-country, and junior varsity football.

As a science curriculum committee chairman there, he assisted in the development of a course curriculum guide, coordinating the efforts of six science teachers.

As a guest lecturer in the Boston College School of Education, he presented a seminar to graduate students on his research utilizing an advance organizer in the classroom and critiqued the lessons and instructional strategies of elementary education undergraduates.

Dr. Mika was also Assistant Coordinator for the Talented and Gifted Program for the District III Boston College Collaborative. He was also a workshop leader in the state Association of Biology Teachers' annual meeting.

Swimming honors

Annie Henry, who will be entering 7th grade at Cohasset Jr. High School this fall, competed in Synchronized Swimming at the Bay State Games on Saturday, July 14 at Boston University. Annie received a silver metal in the 12-and-under solo event, a bronze metal in the 13-and-over trio event and a sixth place ribbon in the 12-and-under figures.

Annie is coached by her mother, Mrs. Wm. Henry, who also coaches the advanced girls's group at the South Shore YMCA in Quincy. Mrs. Henry was one of the ten judges at the Games. Three members of her Y team who attend Weymouth High School, received silver metals in the 13-and-over trio event, a duet placed sixth and another solo placed fifth in that age group.

The program at the S. Shore YMCA begins the middle of Sept. and runs through May. Mrs. Henry may become involved with the synchronized program recently started in Duxbury, as well as continuing her coaching duties at the S. Shore Y. For further information call Carol Henry at 383-0398.

Workshops, classes and a gallery exhibit are some of the activities taking place during the month of August at the South Shore Art Center.

The Center, at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, offers through its classes and workshops an excellent opportunity to improve artistic or photographic skills. The exhibit which will be hanging in the gallery during August is South Shore Landscapes by Gallery Artists, an exhibit of watercolors, oils, acrylics and photos of familar South Shore spots.

Virginia Avery's Outdoor Watercolor for all levels of artistic ability begins Wednesday, August 8 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and meets twice a week on Wednesday and Fridays. She gives her students individual attention in skills the student wishes to improve upon.

Two David Tandy courses, Introductory Drawing for beginning and intermediate levels and Interoductory Painting for all levels will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays, beginning August 7 from 7:30 to 10 p.m. He works with students on the fundamental skills needed for painting and drawing.

For children ages seven to eleven, Serena Brundige will teach Exploring with Paint and Pencil on Tuesdays and Thursday, starting August 7 from 2 to 3:30 p.m. This outdoor drawing and painting course takes the students outdoors to work using nature's forms and ideas from the imagination.

Several weeklong intensive workshops will also occur during Aug. These include: Outdoor Painting, all levels, Betty Kohlberg, July 30-Aug. 3, 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.; Landscape Painting Problems, Margaret Dillon, Aug. 6-10, 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.; Outdoor Drawing and Painting, all levels, Rosalind Farbush, Aug. 13-17, 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.; and Rocks and Water, Ann Murphy, Aug. 20, 22, 24, 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

John Droege, a professor of art at Bridgewater State College, will teach a weeklong photography workshop, Landscape Photography, "Learning to See," Aug. 6-10 with the first meeting at 9:30 a.m. on Aug. 6 and the others arranged. This course is designed for the photographer who has a working knowledge of photography and some awareness of imagery but desires a more thorough understanding of the controls available to him.

League programs

The Cohasset League of Women Voters recently held its Annual Meeting at the Unitarian Parish House, Cohasset. The agenda included a review of the proposed FY '84-'85 budget, adoption of two study units and the election of officers, directors and nominating committee.

The League's 1984-85 elected officers are: Deborah Cook, president; Mary Larson, 1st vice president; Judy Vojungis, 2nd vice-president; Carol Martin, secretary-treasurer. The board of directors are Eleanor Thistlewaite, Pat Gwinn, Rosette Greco, Peggy Corrigan and Barbara Capobianco. On the nominating committee are Chartis Langmaid, Doris McNulty and Marie Caristi. Camille Wells from the Scituate League has been appointed by the state board as an advisor to the Cohasset League. She will work closely with the board members to define goals and help them perform their assignments.

Two local study units were adopted at the annual meeting. A study chaired by Judy Volungis will examine the effect of changing enrollment patterns on the Cohasset School System particularly relating to curriculum, pupil/teacher ratio, tenure, finance and administration will be reviewed. The second study chaired by Pat Gwinn will look at the potential residential and commercial growth in Cohasset. It will examine the amount of developable land available in Cohasset and analyze the effect of various land use regulations on directing growth.

The League is looking forward to a busy year focusing on local issues. Interested persons should contact Mary Larson at 383-0775 regarding participation in League activities.

HHS '35 plans 50th

The class of 1935, Hingham High School, will celebrate the 50th Anniversary of its graduation during the early fall of 1985.

The 50th Reunion Committee has met twice this year and letters have gone out to the most recent addresses available of class of '35 members.

The Committee now knows it needs better information about the following people: Virginia Beal, Frank Burkholder, Dorothy Green Coffin, Frances Behoeme Cole, Marge Townsend Hamilton, Marshall Hutchinson, Marion Manville, Dorothy Hutchinson Studley, Tom Sweeney and Allen Wilbur.

Members of the 50th Reunion Committee would appreciate receiving information concerning the whereabouts of these class members, so that news about the reunion celebration can be spread to all surviving members of the Class of '35.

The 50th Reunion Committee is co-chaired by Phil Stoddard and Virginia Jones Capo. Frances Tewksbury Lawrance is acting as secretary. Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bernan, John Visser, Steve Leighton and Ed Kimpton are all working on gathering together as many of the Class of 1935 as is possible, to celebrate this milestone event.

Childbirth classes

A series of eight classes for expectant women and couples who seek safe, fulfilling birth experience in a hospital or at home are offered continuously throughout the year.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

Sad to say, the inside of my refrigerator doesn't bear much resemblance to the attractive interiors pictured in women's magazines where shelves are laden with layer cakes of icy splendor, tempting dessert glasses of chocolate mousse, whipped cream and a cherry nestled next to the molded salad. Leftovers I can't quite bring myself to dispose of adorn my fridge, with little glass jars half full of ham loaf, a couple of egg whites and half a sandwich left over from yesterday's meal. Reluctant to waste food, I know full well all will eventually end up in the garbage where they should have gone in the first place. 'Tis said some things improve with age and so it is with this recipe from Bev Girten which can brighten up any refrigerator as it sits and marinates in preparation for one's next cookout. Everybody asks her for this recipe which can be made a week ahead of time and may be doubled or made in smaller quantities. Here are the amounts to make 10 servings of Bev's

MARINATED MUSHROOMS

3 lb. mushrooms, wash and cut off bottom of stem before slicing
2/3 c. vinegar
1/2 c. oil
Clove of garlic, or 1/8 tsp. minced garlic
1 tsp. sugar
1½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. each pepper and oregano
2 T water
1 bay leaf
1 onion, sliced into rings
Cover and refrigerate, stirring daily

It takes all kinds to make a good cook. There are those who follow each recipe to a T, others who add clever touches of their own to make a dull casserole more tempting. Some cooks play it by ear, doctoring up a frozen dish or canned soup with cheeses, herbs and wines; so many touches, one might as well have started from scratch. Right now, when scallops are priced at their lowest, Valerie Kroon offers this recipe that can be arranged to serve four or 10, depending on the size of your group. The two cheeses you choose is up to you and you might want to add a little white wine, sherry, or lemon juice and sprinkle with parsley just before serving. Anyway, just as Valerie's friend, Irene Hill, suggested this recipe sounds tempting and is simply called:

SCALLOP CASSEROLE

Layer bottom of casserole with scallops
Top with two cheeses of your own choosing, grated
Layer with cracker crumbs
Pour half and half cream over all

This recipe calls for 2 lb. scallops to serve five. Repeat layers, topping with the crumbs. Bake 40 min. at 350 degrees.

Ladies lunches seem to be going the way of afternoon teas. Only once in a long month of Sundays do "the girls" gather for a home-cooked lunch. Like the whooping crane, these affairs seem to be on the way to extinction. Morning coffees with little pastries seem to be a lot easier, but if you should decide to have a few friends in for lunch, it's wise to keep in mind that in any group of two or more women, at least one is on a diet and the others think they should be. If you have slaved over a rich dessert those dieting will usually eat it only to be polite. If they don't eat it, you'll be annoyed. On the other hand, the non-diet minded ladies have probably been looking forward to dessert and will be disappointed if there is none. Perhaps the thing to do is prepare this quick and easy dessert which can be refrozen. Here is Donna Michals'

CRUNCHY PEANUT BUTTER ICE CREAM PIE

1 (9") graham cracker pie crust
1 qt. of your favorite ice cream, softened
1/2 c. light corn syrup
1 c. crunchy peanut butter
1 c. hot fudge sauce

Early in the day, prepare crumb crust and refrigerate until well chilled. Press 1/2 of softened ice cream into crust. In a bowl, stir corn syrup and crunchy peanut butter together until well blended. Pour mixture over ice cream. Top with remaining ice cream. Freeze until firm, around 5 hours. To serve, let pie stand at room temp. for 5 min. Pour hot fudge sauce on top before serving.

Angler's corner

By George Doucette

This week's Big Bluefish was weighed in by Tom McDonough. The 18¼ pound fish was caught in Plymouth Harbor. Jumbo blues are moving in and out of Plymouth to feed on pogies.

Blues have finally moved into Scituate, Duxbury, Marshfield and Plymouth areas in good numbers and anglers don't have to run to Cape beaches to catch a cooler full of fish. Striped bass are becoming a little more scarce as water warms up, but boats in Cape Cod Bay, off Wellfleet, are taking some nice fish trolling wire line in 60 feet of water using white umbrella rigs with rapala or bomber swimming lures trailed 36" behind the tubes.

Cod are scattered and deep water jigging is slow unless you venture 10 miles offshore in deep water.

Flounder and fluke are still in good numbers outside Plymouth Harbor and some nice fluke, 2 to 4 pounds, were taken drifting outside about two miles off Duxbury Beach this past weekend using worms and spinner rigs.

Fresh water bass fishing has picked up. With the weather temperature stabilizing, fish are settling into a feeding pattern on most ponds in the area. Evening fishing with top water poppers, jitterbugs and surface spinner baits is producing good 4 to 6 pound fish on Hobomock, Furnace, Oldham, Stetson, and Monponsett lakes and if you can get into some of the small shallow ponds in Kingston, we have seen bass in the 4 to 7 pound range on motor oil rubber worms being taken on a regular basis. Early morning, just at sunup, is the best time for these ponds.

Hotline number for fishing information: 826-8341. Hours: Monday-Friday, 9:30 a.m. to 8 p.m.; Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sunday, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Recreation schedule

Dog Obedience Classes

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer two levels of instruction for Dog Obedience classes, to be taught by Mrs. Laurie Ann Cleveland. All classes will be held on the Town Common, beginning Thursday evening, August 9. Pre-registration, by phone, is necessary.

Beginning training classes will be held at 6:30 p.m. Thursday evenings. The purpose of these classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered will include proper use of voice, correction, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. helpful hints on dog ownership and responsibility will also be included.

The obedience will include those exercises beneficial to the pet owner as well as those thinking about eventually showing their dog in obedience. An intermediate class will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday evenings. This class is designed for dogs that have had some prior training or have completed the Recreation Dept. beginner class.

For the above classes, owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck and adding 4 inches. Absolutely no spike collars will be allowed! It is also strongly suggested that handlers wear comfortable shoes and clothes for these sessions. For all classes: The fee if $15 per dog for the eight-week, one-hour per week program. Dogs should be minimum of three months of age, and there is no limit on maximum age.

To register, please call the Recreation office at 383-6791.

Walking tour features harbor

The Cohasset Historical Society will present the first of three summer Sunday afternoon walking tours at 3 p.m. Aug. 12. This guided tour will meet at the Society's Maritime Museum, Cohasset Center for a walk along historic Elm Street to Cohasset Harbor.

The early name for Elm Street was Ship Cove Lane and the harbor itself was known as Ship Cove. Cohasset Harbor was the center of the town's fishing and shipbuilding activity during the two centuries of the "Age of Sail" and Elm Street is the site of residences lived in by Cohasset's sea captains.

Captain John Wilson, Capt. George Mann, Capt. John Lewis, shipbuilder Bela Bates and ship's carver William Beale are among the town's maritime figures who once lived on Ship Cove Lane.

Tour guide for the Elm St. section of the walking tour will be Robert Leonard, a member of the Cohasset Historical Commission. From the head of the Cove, the walk will go to Bates Wharf on Border Street. The oldest of Cohasset's early fishing wharves, Bates Wharf dates from the 1750's and was the site of the Bates family fishing business. Samuel Bates constructed the old stone wharf and the fishing enterprise begun by him lasted until the last quarter of the 19th century.

At the wharf, Charles Fink of the Cohasset Harbor Study Committee will talk about the town's fishing industry which once employed more than one half of its residents. From Bates Wharf the walk will go to Government Island, site of the construction of the second Minot's Ledge Lighthouse.

Today a historical park marks the place where stonecutters once fitted together the many granite blocks making up the 114' high lighthouse off Cohasset's shore which today is a national engineering landmark. Curator David Wadsworth will tell the story of the first and second Minot's Ledge Lighthouse marking one of the most dangerous groups of rocks and ledges on the east coast. Following the Government Island stop, visitors may return to the Maritime Museum for light refreshments. A shuttle van will be available for the return trip. Admission to the tour will be a $1 donation.

Two additional historical walking tours are scheduled by the Historical Society this summer. Sunday, August 26 the subject will be Cohasset's early Burying Ground and Central Cemetery at North Main St. and Joy Place, followed by a mystery bus tour of one of Cohasset's most picturesque historical areas.

Sunday, Sept. 9 will feature a tour of historic Cohasset Common and the 1747 First Parish Meeting House on the Common, followed by a walk to Cohasset Center, ending at the Society's Maritime Museum. Tour guides on that date will include Rev. Edward Atkinson at the Meeting House and Charles Wheelwright at the Common.

For further information about the Cohasset Historical Society's Sunday afternoon walking tours please call 383-6930 or 383-0773.

Artists Salute South Shore

"Salute to the South Shore," scenes of familiar places painted by South Shore Art Center gallery artists, opens Wednesday, July 25 and continues through September 1.

Both framed and unframed works in watercolor, oil and acrylics will be on exhibit in the gallery at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset. The works reflect the varied scenes and landscapes of the South Shore and capture the feelings of an area influenced by the sea.

Hanging in this exhibit are acrylics of Hull by Rosalind Farbush, watercolors of the North River by Janet Blagdon, seagulls and marshes by John Arapoff, scenes of Hingham by Jean Cain, reflections of Cohasset by Margaret Dillon, landscapes by K.A. Calnan and more.

The show runs concurrently with the second session of summer classes and workshops running daily at the Art Center. The little red building with slanting floors across from the Post Office is very familiar to art patrons, artists, students, visitors and residents of the South Shore as a center of diverse activity and a facility for artistic expression.

Visitors may view "Salute to the South Shore" Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. Anyone desiring complete information on classes, workshops, children's events, gallery exhibits or a Center membership, call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Nostalgia : A tour of Bare Cove Park

We started out to investigate Bare Cove Park — an estuary in Hingham where Back River meets the Atlantic, 460 acres of woods and marshlands. It had been a sprawling ammunition dump serving the United States Navy during World War II.

Nature has spent the intervening years reclaiming and redecorating as only she can with her "green thumb."

Open only to walkers, cyclists and joggers, motor vehicles are prohibited by the Park authorities. On our first visit we were struck by the tranquility of the place, the soothing absence of traffic noise.

Although the many old concrete buildings stand hollow and gutted, they are now screened with lush shrubbery and wild flowers. The wide paved roads are marked with arrows pointing to walking trails through woods or giving the measured miles. No traffic lines. The river spreads out into wide marshes, tidal ponds and brooklets that snake through sea grasses.

Puffing a little on our first day, we noted gratefully the even ground and gentle slopes. It was late in March and the park was beginning to green, that spirit-lifting color of new leaves. The path, narrow at the entrance, soon widens and winds willy-nilly.

In less than half a mile we reached the river bank where a channel cuts through from the bay and where, in the summer months, pleasure boats "raft up" on weekends. Reaching out of the water, tall piles — ragged remnants from an old pier — are ideal perches for gulls and cormorants.

Here the road turned, crossed a meadow and led us into a tract of tall oaks, pines, maples and birches; then out once more into sunshine, a salty breeze and a broad view.

The tide was high and the water reflected blue sky and a shimmering image of a stark building on the opposite shore. A white sign painted on the road read "To the Observation Tower."

"Shall we go and observe, Winnie?" I asked my companion. "I wouldn't miss it, my friend."

Around the next bend we came to a log fence where the land fell abruptly off. Peering down, we saw water gushing from under the road on which we stood, tumbling wildly over rocks before winding out through the grasses to the estuary.

Winnie caught my arm and cried, "Look! Down there! What's that spinning around?"

It was a duck and a drake caught in the eddy and swirling helplessly. They paddled furiously until their efforts and the force of the current tossed them around the next curve where they straightened themselves and sailed serenely on and out. We laughed at their insousiance, named them Minnie and Maxi March and called them ours.

During the next several weeks we saw them, constant companions, until the day when they paddled toward us and presented their offspring — eight baby ducklings.

We skirted the river bank and approached the Observation Tower, a sun-bleached building with hollow black squares and oblongs where doors and windows had been. A wide deck on top was furnished with a redwood picnic table and benches and a thick wire railing freshly painted. We climbed the openwork iron stairs and emerged into a blazing sun and a magnificent view of water and woods.

As the weeks went by we realized that our three-or-four-days-a-week walks were getting results. We were losing weight, sleeping better, looking tan and healthy. We made no attempt to cover a certain number of miles; no elbow-swinging, heel-pounding for us. We were enjoying every minute and discovering treasures to store in our memories.

Many wayfarers stopped to chat and compare notes, and we had to admit ruefully that the ducks were not really ours. Learning that a group was planning a nature wildflower walk, we were invited to tag along. In the past I had painted some watercolors of wildflowers and now I toyed with the idea of getting out my tubes and brushes.

On the special walk our interest quickened as we listened to an Audubon Society member rattle off the names of the plants we saw growing. From then on, with Peteson's "Guide to Wildflowers" for reference, we soon learned to recognize the more familiar species...the common yarrow and milkweed, purple vetch and hawkweed. A few weeks later my beloved chicory blossomed with its fringed petals of incredible blue.

Another day we chanced upon a stand of wild blue flags, smaller than our cultivated iris but just as brilliant in color. Above them on the slope they were backed by a mass of brassy gold coreopsis swaying on slender stems.

It was now mid-June and the fields were a galaxy of white and gold daisies nodding "Summer's here! Summer's here!" With Peterson's guide Winnie has started to catalog the wildflowers. I am particularly intrigued by a green plant called Leafy Spurge, new to me. Let me try to describe it. A vivid lime yellow or charteuse, it grows on a single slim stem, two or three feet high, which near the top breaks into a rosette of tiny leaves from which springs a whirl of thinner stems bearing little curly blossoms...much as you've seen fireworks bursting in the sky. Since it grows in profusion here, and I'm told it lasts a long time in water, I wonder why it isn't cultivated. It would surely add interest to a flower arrangement.

New names go into the catalog on each walk; Hop Clover, Sweet Pepper Grass, Spreading Dogbane. But the most endearing is the tiny Deptford Pink and the even smaller Solitary Maiden Pink no bigger than your little fingernail. Ranging in color from pale rose to a deep American Beauty, they stand straight as a row of pins about 10 inches tall. Minute, exquisitely dainty, they spring from the gravel like cerise sequins on a fawn gown.

July finds us wearing shorts, our legs brown and glistening with mosquito repellent. One day we came upon great clumps of thistles as tall as ourselves, the blossoms furry purple paintbrushes with thorny green handles.

You know of course what August brings. Queen Anne's Lace trims the fields, interspersed with golden-rod and the grainy brass buttons of tansy...nearing time to button up your overcoat. Next we found Smooth False Foxglove, a yellow lily with buds like lumpy blobs of butter.

On the way out of the Park one day the quiet was broken by a burst of song from a mockingbird high on a wire. We stood riveted, listening to his repertoire, and agreed that his high notes would challenge Pavarotti.

These walks had been good for us, body and soul. And now we greet each day thinking we just might discover something new and wonderful in Bare Cove Park.

Note: The Park is located just as you enter Hingham going south on Route 3A. Go right on Beale Street in back of a Chinese Restaurant called The Golden Station. The Park is several yards down on the right.

Correction

Last week the Mariner reported the Republican candidates seeking nomination for the Hingham-Scituate-Cohasset area were David Struhs, John Bennett and George Donovan. We were in error.

According to the list submitted to town clerks, the Republicans are John Bennett of Provincetown, Lewis Crampton of Plymouth and George Donovan of Hull.

Democratic candidates are incumbent Congressman Gerry Studds, Peter Flynn and Christopher Trundy.

Second, it was reported that the Studds election committee wrote the League of Women Voters requesting the debates occur June 5. The letter was sent June 5 but did not ask for a specific date.

An area debate between the candidates is scheduled in Hingham for Sept. 7.

When 'art' isn't a matter of semantics

By Lois Martin

Last week we chipped in and bought one. The Penthouse. The rest of the staff said the people at the store would know we were buying it. But if I'm not old enough at 47 to decide to look at dirty pictures that are the news hit of the week . . . when can I?

So we, up front, bought the publication whose existence found renewed scandalizing appeal . . . and about $4 million profit because of its Vanessa Williams 'feature.'

Men and women had been quick to come to Vanessa's defense when word first broke that nude pictures of her taken one or two years ago would be published in Penthouse. "Foul," some said of the publisher of the nudity forum.

PATCHES

Even older women rushed to her defense. She was a young girl then. Her body was beautiful, nothing to be ashamed of. She had conducted her reign as Miss America with dignity and aplomb. Leave her be, they hued and cried, till her crown gets passed along in September.

Pressed indeed, Vanessa explained the photos. She had never given permission. She needed summer work and a portfolio. They were artistic silhouettes in which she wasn't to be recognizable.

So with that impression, mostly Vanessa's side of the story, we put the Penthouse on the desk and opened it to the beginning of the pages featuring Miss America. On the left were color shots of the gorgeous black woman with President Ronald Reagan or in her gowns and glories.

On the right was Vanessa bare breasted. We could handle that, we said. No big deal.

Turning the page we saw more color photos of Vanessa in her standard bearing role as the loveliest and nicest of young American women. On the right, a black and white again of her unclothed. OK. But we're picking up a contrast.

The person who flipped the next page gasped and put it back where Vanessa had only been naked. We rushed to turn the page ourselves.

There was what writers had been working to explain in words for several days. With the photos on those next few pages, no words were needed.

They feature Vanessa Williams with another woman in what must honestly be labeled as pictures of two women demonstrating lesbian activity.

Off the pedestal she fell. The innocence allotted her dissipated in the air like a puff of smoke. There was nothing to read. There was nothing to say. There was what they'd been hinting at. There was what she'd been trying to veil with words like "art," "portfolio," "modeling."

Most people don't pose for a professional photographer in suggestive or obvious sexual poses, whether it was to be published or not.

There was no way Vanessa Williams could have misunderstood either the intent of the photographer nor the potential for the photographs. Let alone the implication. No way.

There are some jobs she could get including those in a portfolio, but they would be limited to more of the same type of work.

It is unlikely the photos could make it in the art world, as silhouettes or as the absolute reflections they were. Ordinarily photos of sexual activity are termed "pornography," rather than "art."

Whether or not she signed a release for the publication, though I suspect we'll learn more on that later, is almost a moot point. In the posing she found both fulfillment and promise of publicity.

Now they're saying, (those other people who like me have invested in the dirty magazine), that the shots were explicit, mortifying, an indictment of a woman we somehow wanted cleared.

We are as liberal as we have ever been.

Had she simply been naked, we could have handled it. Had she been naked with a man, clothed or unclothed, we might have tried to handle it, depending on the action in the photos.

But we allow no man or woman to be our standard bearer who poses professionally in sexual activity. We haven't done that yet.

A judgment? You betcha. And it's because of this. We know men and women are featured in those magazines. Most of us have seen them at one time or another. While we could have accepted the nakedness, none of us has accepted Vanessa's feeble attempts at the making of these photos as an innocent summer job. We would have to be mindless to do that and we resent her pinning her hopes on our mindlessness. You can't count on people to be stupid.

The concensus, Vanessa is this, "Gimme a break."

Get ready for that Prelude 'Non Event'

The Prelude Concert Series is sponsoring its Second Annual Benefit Non-Event this month, and to get things started, Governor Michael Dukakis recently proclaimed August as "Prelude Concert Series Month" throughout the state.

"The Non-Event is, quite honestly, a happening which doesn't," explained Prelude's Director of Public Relations, Nancy Murray Young. "It provides an opportunity for people in the community to make a tax-deductible contribution to the series without having to go anywhere, hire a babysitter, or fit anything else into an already busy summer schedule."

Tickets for the Non-Event are being sold by a network of nearly 100 South Shore residents, including Prelude's directors and trustees, along with a number of supporters of the series.

The tickets are $3 each, and that contribution is tax deductible.

In addition to Prelude's season of four professional chamber music concerts every year, the series sponsors an annual family Christmas Program and a yearly Young Performers Concert and Scholarship Presentation both involving many fine young performers from the South Shore area.

Operated by an all-volunteer staff, Prelude raises the majority of its funds through private donations and corporate and government grants. The Non-Event, according to founder and Artistic Director Barbara Lane, is the only public fundraising effort conducted for the series.

Now in its third season, Prelude has sponsored a number of Massachusetts debut performances and the United States debut of two gifted young British pianists the April. The most recent concert, in July, featuring the renowned Empire Brass Quintet, drew a standing room audience to the Scituate Town Library, where all of Prelude's performances are held.

"Our continuing commitment is to bring quality, internationally acclaimed performed to the local audience," Lane added. "Since it has become increasingly more difficult and expensive for South Shore residents to avail themselves of similar experience in the city, we have found our audiences growing — enthusiastically and appreciatively.

Also, Prelude's affordability ($6 per ticket for the 1984 season) and accessibility have made the concerts easily available for young people, who are encouraged by the opportunity to see and hear such professional performers and for senior citizens, who do not have the means to attend concerts beyond their own communities."

For information about the Prelude Concerts Series or the Non-Event, please call 545-0238, or write, Prelude, Box 109, North Scituate, 02060. The next performance of the third season features Mark Kroll, harpsichord and fortepiano, with Carol Lieberman, violin Oct. 6.

Tickets may be reserved in advance through the above number or address.

Here are portions of the governor's proclamation:

"The Prelude Concert Series is a non-profit community arts organization, founded in 1982 to bring a professional chamber music series, featuring performances of artists of international renown and local artists of merit, to the South Shore area, thus enhancing the development of music appreciation within the community; and

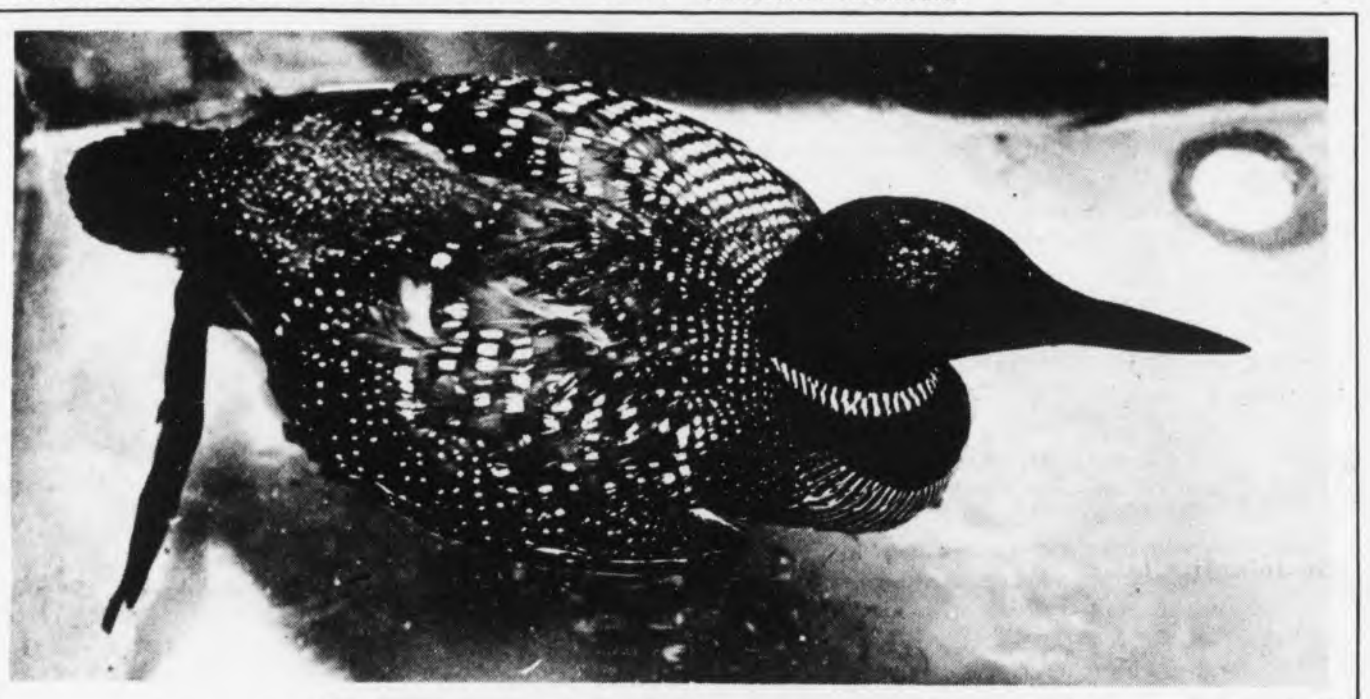
"The frequent use of professional musicians from Massachusetts and New England has heightened audience awareness, and pride in, our own exceptional "native" talent; and

"Through the Prelude Concert Series, young musicians from the South Shore have an opportunity to perform for the general public, outside of a school setting, in the annual family Christmas Program and Young Performers' Concert, as well as apply for scholarship assisstance to the Prelude Concert Series Scholarship Fund; and

"The Prelude concert Series Second Annual Benefit Non-Event will help raise funds to assist the trustees and directors of the series in fulfilling the goals of their cultural commitment."

'On the Twentieth Century'

The Young People's Summer Theatre will present the musical comedy extravaganza, "On the Twentieth Century" Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Aug. 2, 3, 4, at 8 p.m. in Scituate High School.



The group has been rehearsing with its 60 members since mid-June and now culminates in three performances. This will be YPST's 15th musical presentation since the group was started in 1977.

In the lead roles are Paula Kelley as Lily Garland, glamorous movie star; David Todd as Oscar Jaffee, theatrical producer-director; Beth Flynn as Leticia Peabody Primrose, religious nut; Doug Mathews as Bruce Granit, Lily's lover and leading man; Bob Gertsen as Owen, and Bill White as Oliver, Jaffee's henchmen.

The action takes place entirely during a trip from Chicago to New York on the "20th Century Limited," the famous luxury locomotive train in the 1930s. YPST has built a complex to simulate the train necessary for the action.

The score is full of upbeat musical numbers, including the title tune and a number entitled "She's a Nut" which includes a rollerskating sequence.

Tickets can be purchased at the door all three evenings. Admission for all seats is $3 Thursday, and $4 for adults, $3 for 12 years-old and under and senior citizens Friday and Saturday.

Once upon a time, not so far away,

a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.

Now it's coming true again.

All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

Cohasset summer sport scene

By Lisa Shumaker

Eighth Grade Boys' Basketball

Friday, Cohasset overpowered Abington 47 to 34. The score remained close throughout most of the game until Cohasset broke away from Abington in the fourth quarter.

David Shultz led the team's offense with 15 points and several assists. Chris Watters scored 11 points in the fourth quarter to become Cohasset's second highest scorer.

Cohasset remains undefeated in the Marshfield summer basketball league and are very optimistic for the upcoming playoffs.

Junior High Girls' Basketball

Wednesday, Cohasset lost to Marshfield by about eight points. The game was close part of the way, but Cohasset just couldn't hold on.

Overall, Cohasset displayed a good team effort in this game and the girls shot from the outside very well.

Thursday, the girls lost to Whitman/Hanson in a close game 18 to 22. The score was tied up by Debbie Hartley with 15 seconds left in the game, but Whitman/Hanson got lucky and scored four quick points to win the game.

Both Debbie Hartley and Lizzy O'Leary played very well for Cohasset, and the entire team showed remarkable improvement in this disappointing loss.

Cohasset Golf Club

Last week the Cohasset Gold Club held its Jimmy Fund Breakfast Tournament. The winning team with a score of 112 consisted of Jim Froio, Don Baltucci, Frank Lagrotteria, and Fred Aaron. The player with the overall lowest net was Emmet Jackson.

Sunday, the Golf Club held a four balls best two balls tournament. The winning team was Tom Churchill, Bob Little, Doug Bailey, and Alan Ruggles with a score of 120.

Flying Scot Race Series

The flying Scots were unable to race Saturday due to a lack of wind.

However, last week, the Scots staged an exciting race featuring a collision, wet and stormy weather conditions, and several place changes. The winds gusted up to 18 miles per hour, and most of the skippers felt spinnakers were unnecessary for the race.

In first place was Pete Goedecke; in second was Ray Kasperowicz; in third was Steve Bartow; in fourth was Roger Porter and Chet Ellis; in fifth was Peter Chapman; in sixth was Bog Jackson; in seventh was Dick Horn and Jerry Shultz; and in eighth was Bob Smith.

Olympic Soccer

Sunday, the Olympic Soccer Tournament opened at Harvard with a spectacular show featuring a parade of all the nations participating in the Olympics. David Shultz, Kevin Leary, and John Reidy participated in this parade, each of them representing a different country. David Shultz represented Quatar; Kevin Leary represented Saudia Arabia; and John Reidy represented Yugoslavia.

All three boys, being members of Massachusetts' State Select Soccer Team, were given the opportunity to be a part of this exciting event because of their outstanding skills in soccer.

Cohasset Swim Team

The Cohaset Swim Team was unable to participate in Friday's meet against the Scituate Knights of Columbus team due to stormy weather.

This Friday, Cohasset will meet Duxbury Yacht Club.

Church News

The Meeting House will continue to be open each Sunday morning from 9 to 10 a.m. for meditation and prayer through labor day Sunday. Tom Turner is familar to Cohasset scouts

He's new to Cohasset, yes, but to Scouting, Tom Turner of 172 Forest Ave. is most familiar.

Father of two sons, both Eagle Scouts, Turner has held various positions in Scouting over the past 20 years, and has been presented with the District Award of Merit. He knows well the character-building program of Scouting, and how it can shape a boy's life.

An Eagle Scout himself he took pleasure in attending the recent Court of Honor where Luke Lambert of Hingham (Son of Dr. and Mrs. Brent W. Lambert) was advanced to the rank of Eagle.

Turner, his wife, Zella, and daughter, Cheryl, arrived in Cohasset in January. They come from Salt Lake City, Utah and have fallen in love with the beauty of Cohasset and its shoreline. Life members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon) they have found the church in Hingham to be just like the one they left behind.

Tom soon was called to a position of responsibility over the six scout troops within the Hingham Stake, and his wife was asked to serve as Counselor in the Relief Society, the women's organization. Cheryl, a senior at Cohasset High, is now the president of the church's older girls' class—the Laurels.

"It did not take long for us to settle in," the Turners agreed. "But we weren't expecting things to happen quite so fast." And now that Tom has been appointed Advancement Chairman for the Old Colony Council, B.S.A. his wife has only to change the shoulder patch on her husband's uniform and he's back in business.

Candidates corner

Bill Golden

At a recent brunch held at the Scituate home of Faith and Leo King, Bill Golden, candidate for State Senate from the Norfolk/Plymouth District, warned that there is a real need for South Shore residents to think of their area as an integral community and to use their regional clout to resolve some pressing issues.

"Transportation is the perfect example," Golden said.

"When the towns on the South Shore ask if it's possible to reinstitute rail transportation, they're told that it's impossible because the Neponset rail bridge burned down, and there's no money to replace it.

"But remember what happened when a rail bridge from the North Shore burned down? It was coffee and doughnuts the next morning and the promise that it'd be rebuilt within a year.

"This happens because people on the North Shore don't just think of themselves as members of their own towns. They see the North Shore as a political entity with political clout, and they don't hesitate to use that clout. There's no reason on earth that we can't do the same."

Golden added that he didn't know if it would be possible to reinstitute rail transportation but that "at the very least there should be a feasibility study to see if this could be done.

"But rail service alone wouldn't be enough. What we need is a multi-modal transportation system. Have you looked at a map showing the MBTA service? It looks like a hand, with all the fingers pointing north.

"We need increased rail and boat service, and an improved Red Line in addition to improved road transportation.

"When I was in law school I spent one summer in Washington investigating the Congressional use of the highway trust funds. Highways had a monopoly on the money to the exclusion of other modes of transportation services. My study was one factor leading to the expansion of UMPTA (Urban Mass. Transit Administration) and the breakup of the highway trust fund monopoly."

Golden feels he can put the expertise and knowledge he garnered in Washington to good use for the South Shore.

"As a concerned citizen," he noted, "I have been actively involved with the Southeast Expressway construction. I have met with Secretary Salvucci, Pam Wolfe, Commissioner Tierney and other state officials and both expressed my concerns and provided suggestions.

"As your senator, I will be able to do much, much more. We will work together with the people and the officials of other South Shore towns, and we will bring the considerable political clout we will develop to bear. The time has come for the South Shore to speak with a unified voice. When we do, people will have to listen.

"DENTAL FACTS"

The following dental health information is provided by
HARBORLIGHT FAMILY DENTAL CARE,
member of the American Dental Association
and the American Academy of Dental Group Practice.

WHAT IS TOOTH BONDING? The term "tooth bonding" refers to the process of physically and/or chemically attaching restorative materials to teeth. "Tooth bonding" is fairly new technology and has been used in dentistry for about a decade. Today, bonding can be done reliably to the tooth's outer surface, the enamel.

Basically, it works like this: After the dentist has prepared the tooth to be filled, he treats the tooth enamel with a special liquid, which lightly etches a tiny thickness of the surface. Then the material to be bonded to the tooth is applied. As this material sets (like epoxy glue), the bond is completed. The etching step is vital. You will notice your dentist paying special attention to keeping the area clean and dry following etching.

Today, there are two major uses for bonding. The first involves the bonding of tooth colored plastic materials (composite resins), to the front teeth to achieve esthetically pleasing and functional restorations. The second use is for bonding a new type of fixed bridge, the so-called "Maryland Bridge," to allow the replacement of missing teeth.

For further information, contact Harborlight Family Dental Care. Consultations are free of charge.

HOME BUYER and MORTGAGE news

Jack Conway, REALTOR®

Northern Mortgage Has Home Loan Lottery Applications

NORWELL—Applications for a low-rate home loan lottery will be available at the Northern Mortgage Company from July 30 through August 3.

The lower than market rate mortgages are funded through the Massachusetts Housing Financing Authority (MHFA). They will be awarded to potential home buyers in a drawing to be held on August 8.

Winners will qualify for an 11.75 percent fixed-rate mortgage, for a 30-year term, with five percent of the purchase price as a down payment. The dwelling must be owner-occupied and not purchased solely for investment.

Northern Mortgage has $400,000 in mortgage money to release through the MHFA lottery, according to the company's executive vice president, Isabel G. Dole.

The lottery method has been adapted to avoid the long lines and hard feelings of prior MHFA mortgage bond issues and to ensure that everyone has an equal opportunity to apply, according to the MHFA.

Northern Mortgage is located at 133 Washington Street (Route 53) in Norwell.

State refuses sewer funding

By Jane Lane

The town's proposed innovative and alternative wastewater disposal plan "is not viable" and funding for most of the project is in jeopardy. That was the message sent last week to Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

In reply to a letter sent by DeSantis to the DEQE, following a meeting last month, a lengthy formal grant application was filed with the state agency. That application, approved by special town meeting voters in June, cost the town $1500 to prepare.

DEQE commissioner Anthony Cortese informed the sewer commission that the application would not be reviewed by his department, and, "it is obvious that you are simply reiterating many of the same points that have already been answered by the Division of Water Pollution Control."

The DEQE is the state agency assigned to approve grant applications for funding of municipal wastewater disposal plans. In his letter sent last week to DeSantis, the state commissioner rebuked Cohasset's efforts to construct an alternative system, saying the state lists its top priority funding for the construction of wastewater treatment plants and major tranmission systems. Thus, the only portion of the proposed Ward Engineering plan that will receive priority funding is the interconnection to the Hull treatment facility.

Sewer Commission Chairman DeSantis is discouraged at the state's refusal to assist alternative systems, which he maintains is a viable option for small communities under the federal Clean Waters Act. But he remains confident that Cohasset will not be denied funds for the alternative system, and the state's refusal to review the grant application has already been appealed to the Environmental Protection Agency in Boston.

According to rough calculations compiled by DeSantis, the state's denial of Cohasset's application would eliminate about $1.8 million for the anticipated 94 percent collector funding and construction of new sewer areas, and an additional $3 million for the construction and rehabilitation of on-site systems.

DeSantis is confident that Cohasset's case for an alternative system is sound, and that the town's choice of plans will prevail. "This is very serious business for

Town Hall conversion presents obstacle for Rec. Dept.

By Jeff Giles

Golf and tennis are looking up. Even dog obedience is on an upswing. More than half the registered students between grades K and nine are signed up for this summer's playground program.

So who's trying to squeeze the Recreation Department out of Town Hall?

With recent suggestions to consolidate the size of its auditorium and make room for office space, the future of Cohasset Town Hall is as uncertain as ever.

"Every couple of years they form a Town Hall study committee. We've got another one." This sentiment, voiced at the recent Recreation Commission meeting is characteristic of the renewed frustration facing the board as they prepare to defend their territory once more.

According to statistics offered at the August 6 meeting, many if not all, Recreation Department programs are on the climb. The Department is healthy and seems to be growing. Still, the questions persist.

Although most recreation programs require only one-half to three-quarters of the auditorium, many special events, 10 or 12 of which are scheduled sporadically throughout the year, would suffer if any reduction of space was approved. The commission's message is clear: "We need what we've got."

Monday, the members voted unanimously to send a letter to the Board of Selectmen urging them to provide comparable facilities elsewhere if the Town Hall is to be cut back.

The letter will include statistics of attendance at special events sponsored by the commission through the years which will hopefully prove the need is real and the results, substantial.

With the predicted population of public school becoming disturbingly low, some of the commission members said they have the Joseph Osgood School in mind for potential office space, should plans to renovate

Residents clash with golf course

A proposal to alleviate flooding on the Cohasset Golf Club fairway clashed with opinions voiced by several Hingham neighbors.

The proposal to construct a weir and access drive off Cedar Street to eliminate flooding on the seventh and eighth fairways was brought before the Cohasset Conservation Commission Tuesday night. The weir with flashboard construction was designed by Hingham engineer Arthur Munro from Perkins Engineering. The structure is intended to control the flow of water downstream from a drainage ditch along Cedar Street.

According to Munro, the drainage problem at the two holes is caused by the perfectly flat contour of the land. A weir with flashboards will be constructed in a brook located within the golf course property, with a portable pump used to discharge about 5000 gallons of water per minute downstream.

The pump, Munro said, will be used only during severe flooding conditions, which would occur about once or twice a year. The pump would help lower the water table on the fairway into the drainage ditch, and would only be used several days after the storm and not during the actual flooding, Munro assured commission members.

Hingham resident Austin Studley of Hull Street, a vocal opponent to the plans, stated "you will be taking water from a playground and putting into a residential area - the choice is yours (the Conservation Commission)."

Studley presented the Cohasset commission with a petition signed by Rockland and Hull Street residents who are concerned with the effect such a structure will have on homes downstream from the fairway. The Hull

Clerk Appointment

Town clerk Francis Marks recently informed selectmen that Mrs. Constance S. Jones of 404 Beechwood Street, was appointed Asst. Town Clerk of the Town of Cohasset on July 16, 1984.

Flats opened

The Department of Environmental Quality Engineering declared that shellfish from the defined areas no longer contain Paralytic Shellfish Poison Toxin in excess of established standards.

The waters and flats from the Cohasset-Hull town line to the Marshfield-Duxbury town line previously closed because of PSP contamination are now open for harvesting of shellfish. All previous bacterial closures shall remain in effect.

Osgood School repairs

Supt. Eugene Crowell publicly thanked the custodians and maintenance staff who participated in this summer's renovation project at the Osgood School. In particular, Crowell emphasized the "esprit de corps" of the group, and mentioned they completed the project two days earlier than the targeted date.

A lot of the credit must be given,Crowell noted, to Harry Brennock, Bill Esposito, Charlie Stover and overall supervisor John Jacobucci.

Because the workers finished two days early, Crowell allowed them a long weekend with pay. School committee questioned that management procedure, but later assured Crowell he could make similar decisions as long as he is familiar with the work being done and can make a correct determination as to when the work should be finished.

DMH housing endorsement

The school committee, after reviewing a letter from the Department of Mental Health regarding the proposed Intermediate Care Facility for mentally retarded adults in Cohasset, voted to endorse the project.

DMH officials presented preliminary plans to selectmen in July, outlining the plans to build a home for eight mentally retarded adults, on Crocker Road off Route 3A, a former state Department of Public Works property.

The school committee unanimously approved the proposal, and will forward that opinion to selectmen who are scheduled to hold a public hearing about the proposal in early September.

Board members elected

Three Cohasset residents have been elected to the board of directors of Coastal Community Counseling Center, a regional mental health agency.

June Verrochi of 454 Jerusalem Road, was elected for a three-year term. A graduate of Bridgewater State College, she has a master's degree in counseling and psychology from Northeastern University. She heads up the volunteer program at Coastal.

Patricia Purcell of 166 Sohier St., was re-elected to the board for a one-year term. Purcell was graduated from the University of Massachusetts and is a certified alcoholic counselor. She is on the board of directors of the South Shore Council on Alcoholism and on the visiting committee at Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home.

Paul Verrochi of 454 Jerusalem Road, was elected to the board for a two-year term. He is president of Suburban Contract Cleaning Co., 158 Park Ave., Weymouth.

Coastal Community Counseling Center is a private, non-profit, mental health agency serving residents of the South Shore. The agency's comprehensive program includes individual, group and family counseling, and a broad range of community workshops designed to alleviate stresses and improve skills for daily living.

School roofing update

The roofing project for the Deer Hill School has been put out to bid, but the high school roof repairs will proceed a bit slower.

Cohasset School Supt. Eugene Crowell explained last week to the school committee that the $500,000 school roof package has been split into separate projects. The Deer Hill roof repair contract has been put out to bid. According to architect-contractor Frank Bagge, that smaller project will likely be bid on by small, local roofers whose work is familiar to him and school officials. The total cost of that project will not exceed $150,000, Crowell said.

Because of the smaller scope of work, the Deer Hill School work will begin this summer and will be "buttoned up before inclement weather," he added.

There are a few surmountable problems with the high school repairs, according to the superintendent. During recent moisture testing of the roof, the consultants found an expected area in the foyer in front of the gym, that is in poor condition. But they also received disturbing readings, he said, in the newer west wing of the building, and tests are continuing to determine whether complete re-roofing is necessary. Because of the severity of the repairs, the priorities within the project may have to be switched.

Crowell noted there is yet no word on the possibility of receiving matching state funds for the roof renovation project.

Coaches Omitted

The names of varsity boys' basketball coach Ed Minelli and assistant coach Matt Salerno were omitted from the last week's school committee appointments.

During the regional playoffs last season, the school committee approved a recommendation made by member Jack Langmaid, that the boys and girls basketball coaches be reappointed for the 1984-85 season.

Highway paving

Weather permitting, the Cohasset Highway Department will commence paving operations on So. Main St., from the intersection of Summer St. to approximately number 383; and on Jerusalem Road, from No. Main St. to approximately number 121.

The highway surveyor and the highway department asks for cooperation and patience, as there will be some inconveniences during these paving operations.

Teen drinking discussion

Selectmen were scheduled to discuss the problem of teens gathering on public property at night and the drinking that occurrs there.

Police Chief Joseph Kealey was requested to attend the meeting Wednesday night in which solutions to this problem would be developed. Chief Kealey said he has no solutions to the problem which inherently surfaces during the summer months.,

The problems of vandalism, and teens gathering and drinking in public have been hot topics of debate during recent selectmen's meetings.

Although the police chief and his officers spend much time throughout the winter at seminars and discussion on how to deal with the widespread problem, Kealey said the basic solution falls to the parents. It is the parents who must be aware of the children's activities and whereabouts.

The only municipal solution, he said, would be to increase police patrols.

Plans reviewed for Harmony Hill

The Zoning Board of Appeals last week took under consideration a request to convert an abandoned former summer camp for the retarded, into five condominium units.

The proposal, submitted to the appeals board by Country Associates Inc. of Waltham, seeks to convert a dilapidated home at 39 Beechwood Street to five condominium units. The former estate was last used as a summer camp for retarded children and their staff members.

Maria Plante, a longtime advocate for the rights of the mentally handicapped and a member of the Massachusetts Association for Retarded Citizens, informed the appeals board that the state Attorney General's office is currently investigating the legality of the property's ownership. Cardinal Cushing School holds title to the property, with the impending sale to Country Associates contingent on approval of the condominium proposal.

She contends that the property was given 30 years ago to the Massachusetts Special Class Teachers Association for use as a summer camp for retarded youths. In 1967 the name of the association was changed to Massachusetts Special Education Association Inc. The group was dissolved in 1972 and the land was offered as a gift to the Cardinal Cushing School.

The school later sold the property for $100,000 to Country Associates Inc. contingent on plans to convert the former estate to condos.

Plante told the board members that attorneys within the Attorney General's office are investigating the legality of the transfer of the deed by a non profit agency that did not exist at the time of the transfer.

She asked that a special permit, as requested by the proposed developers, not be approved until the legality of the deed transfer is determined. Appeals board chairman Myrna Putziger disagreed the deed transfer had any bearing on the proposal before the board.

The home, which for 20 years served as a summer camp for retarded children, has been left abandoned for about eight years. It has been continually vandalized and has been labelled a firetrap by residents throughout Cohasset.

At last week's meeting, Norman Kaufman, a trustee of Country Associates Inc., explained that the estate could never again be converted to a facility for the retarded. The extensive repairs and renovations which would be required under state code, would be cost-restrictive, he said.

In a presentation to the appeals board, Scituate attorney Paul Morley, representing the developers, detailed the proposal. A special permit would be required to convert the two-acre property into five condo units. The proposal includes plans to construct a 10-car parking lot in the rear of the building, an entirely new septic system, and the complete gutting and renovation of the interior and exterior of the building.

The Board of Health is currently reviewing plans for the construction of a septic system at the property.

In a sketching presented by architect Ralph LeBlanc of Hull, the landscape in the front of the building would be terraced upon an outcrop of ledge, with tree buffers on the west side of the property. There would be a basement unit with one bedroom; one one-bedroom and one two-bedroom units on the first floor; and two units on the second floor with two bedrooms extending into the third floor of the home.

In answer to appeals board member Barbara Powers' question, Kaufman said he would not be willing to keep the entire two-acre parcel for the condominiums. The developers intend to split lots 9 and 9A in half, not dismissing the future possibility of constructing a single-family home on the other lot east of the existing structure.

Several residents, mostly neighbors, spoke in favor of the proposal as the best alternative to phasing out a local eyesore. The development of the property would eliminate the gangs of youths that frequent the area, they said.

Others residents opposed the development of the property from its former use. Earl Goodrich of South Main Street noted that if the proposal was adopted, Cohasset would be the only area community without such a facility for retarded citizens.

Alfred Odermatt of Norman Todd Road opposed the plan, saying the property should have been offered to some agency for use as a facility for the retarded. His principal objection, Odermatt said, was "the impact (the condominium development of a single family residence) will have on the whole town. The door can open."

Thomas Coyne of North Main Street, who also owns property about 250 feet further down from 39 Beechwood Street, questioned whether Country Associates Inc. will own property to provide an access to the rear of the property for the proposed parking lot.

Hingham residents oppose golf course drainage

Street resident reiterated that although the structure may be properly engineered and operated now, "what assurances do we have five years down the road that this thing will be done right?" he asked.

Commission member Robert Maki, who presided over the hearing, noted that such a concern could be included in the commission's conditions of order issued for the project.

Studley noted that when the Weir River tide is high, "there's no room in the drainage brook for two more gallons of water. If there's a good tide and you're pumping, we can't handle it."

At the outset of the hearing, Munro explained the purpose the weir and flashboard structure would serve. The weir will be concrete, he said. After a severe rainstorm occurs, such as in May or July of this year, a portable pump will be used to induce the water from the flooded fairways at a faster rate into the drainage brook. The discharge rate will never exceed 5000 gallons per minute, and the water will always be confined within the ditch, he added.

The only time the pump will be used, Munro explained, will be when the water flow discharge within the brook is lower than 3750 gallons per minute. He also noted the pumping will not affect Cohasset residents on Lamberts Lane because the elevation of that land is much lower than this floodplain area.

"We're talking about two inches of water in a four-foot ditch. No water will leave this ditch at any time. It will not affect peak flows at any time," Munro said.

The gravel drive on the golf course property is also requested for use in transporting the pump to and from the weir.

Yard landscaping reviewed by conservationists

The Conservation Commission heard a proposal Tuesday night by Bayberry Lane resident Isabel Salvador to landscape her backyard, located within 100 feet of wetlands.

A notice of intent was filed by the Salvadors in order to landscape their yard which is within 100 feet of Peppermint Brook, a town water supply that flows through their yard. They also requested permission to construct a driveway on the side of their lot.

The commission has 21 days in which to compile a condition of orders.

As Salvador explained to the commission, the owners intend only to landscape the yard and to construct a small 18 by 22 foot golf green in the corner of the lot.

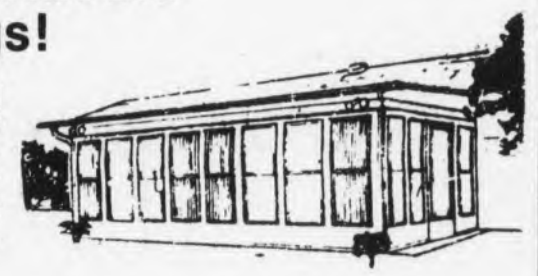
The proposed asphalt driveway would be located outside the 100-foot wetlands area, and would slope down to the street.

Commission members, who have observed the area, noted the brook has always been maintained and cleaned by the Salvadors. They requested however, that a four-foot buffer zone, lined with low shrubs, be constructed along the brook which cuts through the entire yard.

Following the hearing, the commission members agreed that the golf green could be constructed, but no more than 10 cubic yards of loam could be used. The golf tee would be about four inches higher than the elevation of the adjacent land. Commission members said the golf green and the amount of fill needed to construct it would have no negative effect on the water source.

A driveway would have to be constructed with a downward slope to the street, rather than flowing to the lower-lying elevation of Peppermint Brook.

The commission also heard an application by Raymond and Dorothy Remick of 59 Joy Place to reconstruct an existing seawall along their property on Little Harbor.



Commission members continued the hearing until August 21 so engineers can include details of the construction of the reinforced concrete wall. They also want the Department of Quality Engineering to determine if a license is necessary from the Army Corps of Engineers.

The Remicks will also check with the town's zoning officer to see if any additional municipal permits are necessary to construct the buffer wall located on the perimeter of the property at the water's edge. The wall currently located there is deteriorated, according to Remick and contractor Richard Farwell.

Mosquito control out to get the itch

By Patricia Desmond

Do you know how many kinds of mosquitos there are?

Well, the people from Plymouth County Mosquito Control are trying to do something about the onslaught.

The heavy rain of all spring contributed to an apparent bumper crop of the little pests in the hot, sticky weather of a few weeks ago. The scope of the problem seems to have lessened.

The reason for the improvement is two-fold. First, the people from Plymouth County Mosquito Control have been out there with their hand and roadside equipment chemically killing the pests. Second, the weather has been more kind.

But back to Cohasset and the bug problem, which, by all accounts has not been nearly as disastrous as our neighbors, even during the rainy days of June and July.

The reason for the improvement is two-fold. First, the people from Plymouth County Mosquito Control have been out there with their hand and roadside equipment chemically killing the pests. Second, the weather has been a bit kinder (though after each siege of rain, there may be another bumper crop coming).

The selectmen's office has not received one phone call complaining about the lack of, or excessive spraying of the bloodsucking pests.

A spokesman for Plymouth County Mosquito Control said Cohasset residents have called their office far less frequently than surrounding communities. Since May, the office has received 25 requests for spraying. The heaviest flood of calls came on June 20 and 21 after a severe rainstorm.

Last Thursday, she added, three Cohasset residents asked that their neighborhoods be sprayed. The office usually receives one or two calls a day after a heavy storm.

Many people from Cohasset, she added, don't bother with the agency, but they travel to a garden shop and purchase some do-it-yourself chemical spray.

Ken Ludlam, superintendent of Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project, said sometimes people contribute unwittingly to their own problem with mosquitos.

He will not recommend that people attempt to spray their own property with mosquito larvicides — the chemicals that kill hatching eggs.

"But mosquitos breed in standing water," he said. "If people want to do something to control them, they can eliminate sources of standing water."

His suggestions of where you can look for puddled water include: plastic wading pools, clogged drains, rainspouts, bird baths, old tires, etc.

"Any container of water is likely to be a breeding ground," Ludlam said. "It should be emptied."

He warns people who insist on doing their own spraying to follow the directions.

"They could use malathion which is available at garden centers," he said. "As long as they don't try to double up on the dose.

"We don't favor large area doses unless there is actually a problem," Ludlam said.

This is Ludlam's first year running the Plymouth County Project. He originally came from nearby Randolph but recently he's been working on mosquito control in Maryland.

"There's a real big problem there," he said. "It takes cold weather to kill them off."

This year there is no automatic roadside spraying being done by Plymouth County Mosquito Control. The spraying comes in response to complaints which are used to provide a barometer of the problem.

Ludlam said his workers check out an area before spraying to determine if the complaints are based on fact.

"The public can help us out by calling if there's a problem," he said.

The number for Plymouth County Mosquito Control, which is based in Kingston, is 1-585-5450.

In the past, spraying was somewhat more automatic at the mosquito control project.

Ludlam said the system being used under his management is basically what was done in Maryland. He worked nine years for the mosquito control project in the Chesapeake Bay area.

The first spraying in Norwell this season occurred May 31 and since then spraying has continued on the basis of complaints.

There was a larvicide sprayed aerially over the salt marshes early in the season.

Any spraying done by the project now is hand or roadside work. Ludlam said malathion is used at one-half ounce per acre which is the approved rate.

Malathion only kills mosquitos it comes in contact with.

The Mass. Audubon Society favors even less spraying. A printed statement available from the organization opposes the routine use of broad spectrum spraying which it says has not been proven effective and carries greater health risks than the mosquitos.

However, the statement goes on to say that in a bona fide health emergency, it approves spraying. The Society considers it a health emergency (and so does the state) if two cases of Eastern Equine Encephalitis are found.

A call to the state proved that there have been no cases so far this year reported of EEE.

Purple martins do eat mosquitos but even the Audubon Society doesn't believe purple martins eat enough mosquitos to make a dent in the problem.

Ludlam expects that real relief will come in September with cooler and less humid weather arriving.

The Greek islands are beautiful pieces of rock and earth strewn upon a turqoise sea. Each is a special place where you are seduced by the sunshine and food, the white-washed houses and pastel villages, the beauty of the land and the graciousness of the people. Corfu is considered by many to be the most beautiful of the Greek Islands. However, in addition to its natural beauty, much of the lure of Corfu is its international flavor which has been indelibly stamped on the island by several centuries of foreign rule. The real mecca for tourists on the northern end of the island is Paleokastritsa. Composed of six small coves, set beneath soaring cliffs, it is one of the most scenic places of the entire Mediterranean.

Shipyard improvements unveiled

By Judy Gilman

Gov. Michael Dukakis and a bevy of state officials unveiled a $6 million plan to upgrade the Hingham Shipyard, access to the Boston Harbor islands, and commuter access by water to Boston Tuesday morning at the foot of the commuter boat dock.

The immediate, visible improvements to the World War II facility includes the 450-car parking lot for boat commuters and the ongoing rehabilitation of Building 45 as the main office for the Department of Environmental Management (DEM) Harbor Islands administration and as a waiting room for boat commuters when inclement weather strikes again. And future plans include a proposed water taxi service to Logan Airport.

The state delegation arrived at the Hingham dock via the new commuter boat Chimera and returned to Boston on the dual-hulled Freedom, giving them a broad experience of the transportation possibilities via water for the South Shore.

"This is a focus on three things," said Martha Reardon of Hingham, associate commissioner of the state Department of Public Works (DPW). "Water transportation, the revitalization of the shipyard, and the expansion of accessibility to the Boston Harbor Islands recreational facilities are all included."

DPW Commissioner Robert Tierney humorously noted that Dukakis administration support for improvement of South Shore transportation did not begin, contrary to rumor, with the reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway. "The interest started back in 1975," he said. "This is the culmination of one phase. We've added at least 450 daily commuters using the boats to Boston since early April. That's at least 400 cars that are off the expressway between 6:30 and 9 a.m. It makes a difference between smooth operation of the reconstruction area and chaos."

Tierney added that bids for the reconstruction of Route 3A past the shipyard will go out this fall, with construction anticipated next year. And the state has plans to install a light at 3A and the shipyard road and bike racks for cycling commuters taking the boat.

Dukakis said he was very much encouraged by the number of persons he saw taking the 11 a.m. boat to Boston as well as the DPW's numbers on the increase of commuter traffic. The governor had chatted with the passengers before the presentation began. "These folks were visiting here from North Carolina and Maryland, among other places," he said, "and they were very impressed with the boat service here.

"With this facility and the rehabilitation of Long Wharf (in Boston), the future will be terrific," Dukakis said. "We need to offer pleasant, comfortable attractive commuting facilities by water. As my old friend (State Sen. Allan) McKinnon has etched indelibly on my brain, the South Shore needs water transportation."

Dukakis then went on to speak of the benefits of opening up the accessibility of the harbor islands.

"The islands are one of the great resources of the area," he said. "But it wasn't until 1975 that the state moved to create the Harbor Islands State Park. Now we're making them more accessible, so more people can enjoy them.

"This is the beginning of a bright new day for this fine old harbor," Dukakis said. "We're very strongly committed to its revitalization."

Among local activists cited for their efforts were former Hingham selectman Joseph Daly, Richard Cook of the Hingham planning board and the members of the town's transportation committee. McKinnon and State Rep. Frank Hynes (Scituate-Marshfield), together with Scituate selectman Eleanor Seaton, were also on hand for the ceremonies, together with officials from DEM, DPW, the MBTA and the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction.

"DENTAL FACTS"
The following dental health information is provided by
HARBORLIGHT FAMILY DENTAL CARE,
member of the American Dental Association
and the American Academy of Dental Group Practice.

WHAT IS A MARYLAND BRIDGE? The so-called "Maryland Bridge" is the result of one of the most recent advances in dental technology. Essentially, it is used to replace missing teeth by means of attaching false teeth to natural teeth on both sides. These appliances derive thier name from the fact that they were originally conceived at the University of Maryland, School of Dentistry.

At this point you may be wondering what is so new about that. In fact, you probably know quite a few people who have had bridgework for years. The differences between these traditional fixed bridges and the new "Maryland" type lies in how the bridge is supported and finally attached. In the traditional bridge, the support is gained by crowning (or capping) the teeth in front of and behind the space and attaching a false tooth between. Also, traditional bridges are cemented in place.

The beauty of the "Maryland Bridge" is that the support is gained by simply bonding the bridge onto the teeth in front of and behind the space. In this way, no teeth need to be crowned. The procedures involved are, therefore, simpler, less expensive and, most importantly, more conservative.

For further information, contact Harborlight Family Dental Care. Consultations are free of charge.

☐ Judy Rauhauser of Cohasset has accepted a position with Hale and Dorr, Boston. Ms. Rauhauser completed the Options Program at Katherine Gibbs School, Boston. Options is a program designed for adult women who want to enter the business world or who are seeking to enhance or change their current position.

☐ If it seems that Leo Fiori is daydreaming a little bit, he is! Actually, he is counting the days (less than two weeks away) until he heads to Italy! It is his first vacation in eight years, and he can hardly wait . . . we will expect a detailed report upon your return, Leo!

☐ Navy Constructionman Paul V. Emanuello, Jr., son of Paul and Marjorie Emanuello, Sr., of 49 Hull Street, recently departed on a deployment to Okinawa, Japan. He is a member of Naval Mobile construction Battalion-133, based at Gulfport, Miss. While in Japan, the Seabees will be tasked with 44 construction projects at various military sites throughout Okinawa. Projects range from airfield repairs to pier and building rehabilitations.

☐ Evie Dorr celebrated a "big" birthday last weekend, and a huge surprise party was held in his honor. All of his pals from everywhere gathered to wish him well, coming from as far away as Vermont . . . a gala event that will be remembered by all, especially the "birthday boy".

☐ July 21 marked a big day for Joe Crossen and his wife, Donna. That's the date that they became the proud parents of their new little baby daughter, born at South Shore Hospital. All members of the family are doing super!

☐ John P. Rolandelli has been named senior vice president, life marketing, by CU Life, one of the Boston-based Commercial Union Insurance Companies.

Rolandelli is responsible for all life marketing programs. He was most recently vice president, life marketing.

He joined CU in 1980 as vice president and manager of CU Life of New York and played a key role in organizing that subsidiary, which began operations with National Life of Canada, Montclair Associates SAFECO Life Insurance and Metropolitan Life.

He is a member of the executive committee of the Cohasset Little League, a coach for Little League baseball and basketball and former president of Residents of Community Action. He and his wife, Barbara, have two sons, Michael and Christopher.

☐ Alison Williams left Cohasset last week, the proud owner of a card telling all that she completed the Intermediate Swimming course at the Cohasset Swim Center. It doesn't seem too unusual to people in this area, but Alison lives in Pittsburg, and there aren't an awful lot of swimmers that have Red Cross cards, so it is certain that she will be a celebrity in her home town!

☐ Congratulations to Peter and Patricia Abbott on the birth of their little girl, born in South Shore Hospital on July 24.

☐ This Sunday marks the first Historical Society walking tour, a guided tour that will begin at the Society's Maritime Museum, walk down Elm Street to the Bates Wharf then to Government Island. Its nice to know that these historical places exist in our town, and to learn all about them is a treat. For more information about this tour and the two that are to be held later, call 383-6930 or 383-0773.

Dry land at last, as these adventurers dock their vessel at Government Island.

☐ Every once and a while, a recipe really looks great for summer fare. Last week Joan Pinkham had the best marinated mushroom recipe . . . if you haven't tried it, do! Everyone will rave about it, and it sure looks nice on the plate.

☐ Heard excellent reviews on "Uncommon Woman and Others", the play put on by a group of former CHS students under the direction of Mr. Emmons. The hardest thing would be to have the audience sitting on the stage with the actor, but many loved the arrangement. Its nice that there is a "summer theatre" for those who love the acting.

☐ Fortune magazine had an extremely interesting article on a "Cohassetite" and how well he has done for himself . . . Peter Guilfoyle, son of Dick and Barbara Guilfoyle, has made a name for himself in the technology field, namely computing with light! Peter, of GuilTech Research, conceived a way to achieve digital accuracy in an optical computer. He hopes to be the first to market one. An interesting sideline remark made by Peter's Dad, "Peter attributes his interest and success in mathematical endeavors to Mrs. Bates, who told him to use his math abilities and taught him how to begin to do same". Anyone who reads Fortune knows that this is Peter's second appearance in the magazine, this time complete with a nice picture of him. Isn't it grand?

☐ Please take time out of your busy schedule to let us know what's been happening with your summer . . . everyone loves to ready their name in print!

Those volunteers

Let's hear it for all those brave and noble souls who have worked this past year on committees, commissions and town boards for the good of their town. Lord knows, it did their pocketbook no good.

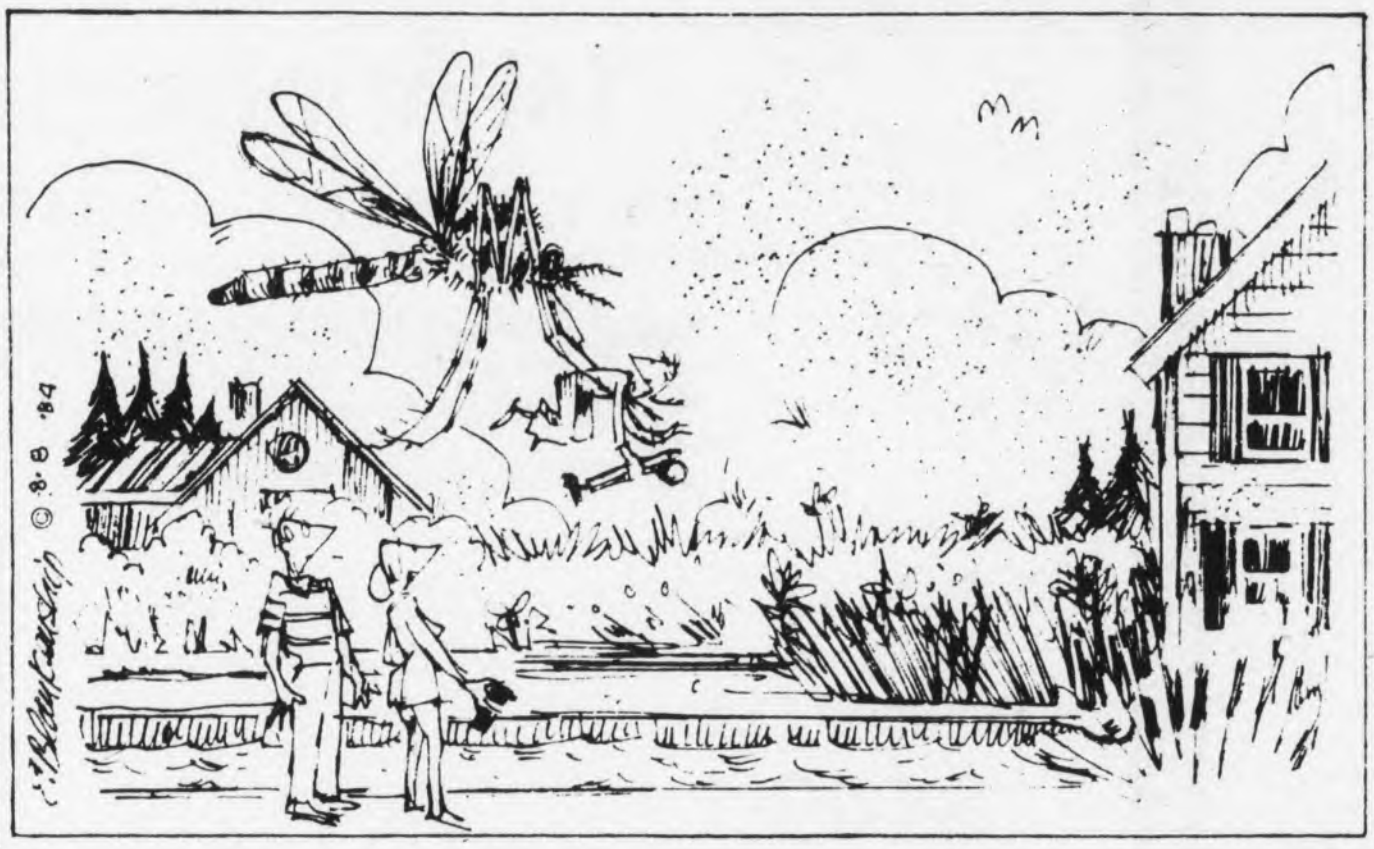
These are the volunteers who, for various altruistic reasons, submit their talents and energies to the ultimate test for their town. They are not publicly heralded for their actions. They do not see their names printed on election ballots, plastered over newspaper advertisements during a campaign.

They simply request that their expertise be utilized in some capacity for the town. Whether it be a drainage study committee, harzardous waste disposal committee, town hall study committee, zoning board of appeals or an EMT advisory committee, these participants deserve our gratitude and admiration.

How many of us have been willing to come home after a long day at the office, sit down for a quick bite of dinner and scoot off to a meeting that may linger until 11 p.m.? And these people just don't sit at these marathon sessions and stare out a window. They ask questions, argue the answers and make difficult decisions affecting their neighbors and families.

It takes courage for someone to decide to face the public and run for election to a municipal office. But it takes a very special person to overlook the ego involved in a campaign and quietly dedicate the time and effort involved in a volunteer committee.

Cohasset has more than its share of boards, committees, commissions and study groups. Some say these boards have overstepped each other's authority or are duplicating efforts.



Whatever the situation, these men and women, many of whom are professionals with long office hours and families at home, deserve our respect. Without them, town government would cease to function.

Situations might become ticklish at times, and issues might be aired in the media. But through the good times and bad, these people cared enough to continue. Not for the fame, or fortune - but so that Cohasset will continue to thrive.

With the caliber of Cohasset's volunteer force, we can't help but achieve.

As new committee members are appointed this week by selectmen, we take this opportunity to thank those who shared their precious time and talents with us.

Grandparents get the best revenge

By Claire McDonough

"You know," the Dragon mused, "I really miss the old days when the kids were little."

I looked at him curiously. "Really? I seem to recall you spent most of those years telling them to grow up."

"Probably," he admitted, "but they sure were cute. And funny. I wonder why I didn't enjoy it more at the time."

"Some things," I told him, "can only be enjoyed when filtered through the distorting gauze of years.

"For example, Tom, one of my Vandals, was telling us about his first camping trip with his family. Seems he had forgotten to check the porta-potty before they left, and it had a big crack in it. So he bought something in Woolworth's that you suspend from a tripod, and stacked it with all his newly washed sleeping bags and blankets.

"The next time he looked his little girl was using it. First time ever for her. Too bad there wasn't a potty under it."

"I can see how that might take some getting over," the Dragon acknowledged, "but the rest of the trip was a success, right?"

"I guess so. Except for the thunder and lightning storm with torrents of lightning-laced water rushing through the tent where Tom and the kids were cringing, and Joanmarie yelling from the van, 'You're all going to die!' "

"Other than that it was o.k., except that Joanmarie had bought new outfits for the kids and they got muddy and smelly. Tom put them outside in plastic bags, and the next morning the people who ran the camp grounds came around to pick up the trash early, and they saw these plastic bags outside the tent . . ."

The Dragon shuddered. "Now we're talking money down the drain," he moaned. "Does this story have a happy ending?"

"Sort of. They decided not to get a divorce right away, and after a while they got over it. Within a year or so they were able to laugh, and now Tom has added it to his treasury of Terrible Tales. He got a lot of giggles in the van."

"Well," the Dragon said. "I still miss having little kids. Remember how funny Patrick was as a boy?"

"Do you mean the time you were sick and he mixed you some medicine of orange juice and bacon fat," I asked, "or the time he coaxed the skunk into the garage?"

"Both," he replied. "I'm not sure I could survive either of them again, but they sound funny now. And you'll have to admit Maureen was a riot."

"Sure. Especially the time she asked your boss why he had a funny looking nose and the time she picked you a bouquet of poison ivy."

"I was thinking more of the time you were planning a Tupperware party," he replied, "and she told Sister Mary Hilarian that her mother was having an affair."

"Screamingly funny," I agreed. "Almost as good as the time you told Jay to ground his radio to a water pipe. Too bad you didn't think to tell him not to drill a hole through the bathroom wall to do it."

The Dragon nodded. "I'm still glad we have those memories. And it's even more fun now that we have grandchildren. We get to laugh at the funny things right away. It's our kids who won't see the humor for years."

I smiled.

"Being grandparents," I agreed, "is the best revenge."

Library houses text on media debate

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray has given each of her districts' town libraries a copy of the booklet "News Coverage of Public Figures: Does The Press Go To Far?" published by the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company.

The text is a recent debate between two champions of opposing views on the timely issue of media ethics in regard to coverage of public figures.

The personal views expressed by the Honorable William M. Bulger, Massachusetts State Senate President, and Anthony Lewis, New York Times columnist, represent clearly divergent positions that help crystallize this issue — one that confronts and challenges each of us every day.

In distributing this document to the libraries I do so in the strong conviction that for too long, it has been the media's position on First Amendment rights that has dominated the public forum with little opportunity afforded public officials for the expression of their own viewpoint. I believe the debate provided an opportunity, to share both views," Rep. Murray said.

I believe when my constituents review the text, they will become increasingly mindful of the critical importance the 1964 New York Times v. Sullivan decision by the U.S. Supreme Court has had on this issue today. The sweeping privileges granted the new media by Sullivan, elected officials and other leaders of both public and private sectors must today conduct their activities under the critical eye of journalists who frequently operate without ethical constraints or regard to factual accuracy.

The beach patrol on Sandy Beach is busily protecting Cohasset shores. What are we to do when college starts?

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

In just a couple of weeks the Republican Platform Committee will convene prior to the National Convention in Dallas to decide the Republican Party's policies for the next term. The two Massachusetts members of the Committee plan to take with them to Dallas a concise, meaningful platform plank on women's issues.

Last week they held a regional public hearing to shed some light on the important issues facing women and the Republican Party today. Testifying at the hearing, most notably, was Congresswoman Claudine Schneider (R-R.I.). Other testifiers included incumbent members of the Massachusetts House and Senate, U.S. Senatorial and Congressional candidates, state legislature candidates, delegates to the convention and members of Republican organizations.

It has been confirmd that a point of primary consideration for me to take to Dallas is revising the 14th Amendment to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sex. Other subjects of interest include Day Care, comparable worth and pension reform.

You've Come a Long Way

The Republican Party historically pioneered the way for women in politics and government.

In 1892, it was the Republican Party that was the first to seat women at the national convention, giving women official recognition in the political process. It was a Republican Senator who first introduced a proposal in the U.S. Senate to give women the right to vote and in 1919 passage of that amendment was the first act of a newly elected Congress.

Today, the Republican Party can boast of having the only two women serving in the U.S. Senate. There are nine Republican women serving in the U.S. House of Representatives and thousands more in state legislatures and muncipal and town offices across the country. President Reagan has appointed women to serve at high levels in his cabinet and throughout his Administration. He also appointed the first woman justice to the U.S. Supreme Court.

In sum, the Republican Party was always the party of equal opportunity and we intend to keep it that way by proposing a substantial plank dealing with women's issues for our Party Platform.

An identification with Olympic hero

I have watched the Olympics since I can remember and have enjoyed them. The athletes seemed like golden creatures bound for mystical glory or defeat. The pageantry intrigued me, but I never felt emotionally involved, beyond twinges of patriotism.

These 1984 Summer Games opened up a door of emotion I never imagined existed. For the first time, I found myself identifying with an Olympic athlete and gold medal winner. Joan Benoit, winner of the first Olympic marathon for women, and I both went to Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Me.

And during the marathon she broke her concentration only once, to smile at a Bowdoin banner.

I remember her as being an unassuming, tiny woman, a friend of a friend, who I would pass in the gym or on campus.

We were women at a male-dominated school. Bowdoin had been co-ed for less than 10 years. Most women at Bowdoin were serious and determined to succeed academically and athletically. At the time, the college had only a fraternity system and it was notorious for discriminating against women, making them social instead of full members. Bowdoin's charter up until about five years ago failed to mention equality of sex along with its traditional equality of race, creed and color.

The social climate at Bowdoin has improved immensely over the past few years, thanks to the strong examples made by women like Joan Benoit.

Now I know an Olympic athlete whose courage to achieve excellence started very close to home.

Problem is Dooley

To the Editor:

I was thoroughly disgusted when I read the article in the July 26 issue of the Quincy Patriot Ledger regarding the "Hostilities rekindled between chief, firefighters".

Although I am not presently a resident of Cohasset, I was born there in 1937 and lived there for several years before my parents decided to move to the big city, South Boston, because of my father's business. However I still have several relatives living in Cohasset, including my mother whose family were residents of Cohasset going back perhaps 100 years ago, which is one of the principal reasons for my writing this letter. I have always loved Cohasset and I have many fond memories of my boyhood days there, including attending the Ripley Road School, my newspaper route around town on my bicycle, going out to the ocean with the fishermen and lobstermen, and the old railroad station. I also have vivid memories of the firemen and policemen, especially Police Chief Hector Pelletier and Fire Chief Charles Piepenbrink, two very dedicated and outstanding leaders.

I believe that it is memories which caused me to be so concerned and disturbed about this problem within the fire department, plus the fact that I have always been a very strong supporter of the two most important departments in any town or city, the fire and police departments. Since I am not presently a resident and taxpayer of Cohasset, perhaps this letter will not have any impact on the elected officials, or Fire Chief Dooley, but hopefully this letter will inspire many of the residents who are truly concerned about their public safety departments to bring this matter to the attention of their officials, either directly or via "letters to the editor". Since these residents are paying for and expect the services of their fire department, including the very vital ambulance service, I feel very strongly that they should stand up and be counted, and that there should be an immediate and positive response from the Selectmen and Dooley to this problem.

The problem is quite obvious. Chief Dooley is destroying the morale and dedication of the twenty three (23) firefighters who are doing their very best to protect the citizens of Cohasset. I have seen this same problem take place in other communities and the results were devastating. I would not like to see this take place in Cohasset and I would think that the majority of the residents will agree with this.

I presently live in Marshfield where we are very fortunate also to have an outstanding fire department such as Cohasset, Scituate, Duxbury, Pembroke and several other south shore communities have. But at the same time, we are also very fortunate to have an outstanding Leader as Fire Chief, not a dictator who should familiarize himself with the First Amendment to the Constitution, Freedom of Speech, amongst other things.

Hopefully the concerned residents of Cohasset will persuade their elected officials to correct this problem before it gets any worse. Better yet, perhaps Chief Dooley will get the message and go back to Connecticut or some other state. I am certain the town will benefit from his departure, and just as important, the morale of the firefighters will be restored. Proposition 2 1/2 has already done enough damage. I would not like to see any more harm done by just one individual.

The M & E plan wins hands down

To the Editor:

Your excellent summary of my "Sewer Follies of Cohasset" published August 2 is appreciated. As you implied, the delay to investigate alternatives, no matter what we do now, will result in a cost greater than if we had proceeded on the original schedule with the M&E plan. But when the Ward plan and M&E plan are compared using consistent assumptions for funding, the difference in cost to Cohasset is only $1/2 million. This is hardly bankruptcy, when spread over 20 or 30 years, and related in our annual town budget of about $8 million — $240 million in 30 years.

As shown in my study, the annual operating cost is about equal for the two plans. The sewered area is the same for both — but the M&E treatment plant permits much future expansion of the sewered area, whereas the capacity of the Hull connection is less than required by the sewered area and may result in having to add our own treatment plant later. The Ward plan doesn't limit growth, it only places unbearable water use restrictions on those sewered by it.

The rehabilitation of failed on-lot systems in the non-sewered areas is the same problem with either the Ward plan or the M&E plan, even if the Ward report talks about it more. There is no difference in the funding or lack of funding, and no difference in what is acceptable or unacceptable to the authorities who guard our health from our own fecklessness.

I can well understand the appeal of doing nothing and thereby spending nothing. But if one has to chose between M&E and the Ward plan as it finally evolved, the M&E plan wins hands down.

To count on legal action to set aside the Agreement for Judgement, in hopes that we can escape and do nothing, is to put home over judgement. The probability of losing is very high, and the added cost from further delay very high. The sensible move is to optimize the M&E concept and proceed to build it.

Candidates corner

Golden in Cohasset

Joanne and Maurice Hart of Atlantic Avenue sponsored a reception for State Senate Candidate Bill Golden last weekend.

Golden, who grew up in Cohasset, spoke of the need for strong legislative leadership in dealing with regional problems.

"When I was growing up in Cohasset during the 1950's and 60's, there wasn't any problem that the town didn't believe it couldn't solve for itself. That's no longer true. We are not going to solve transportation problems ourselves, not going to solve sewage, solid waste, economic development, or taxation issues on our own. We need a strong regional identity, a strong regional strategy for dealing with these complex issues. And we need a strong legislative leadership working together," he said.

On the hazardous waste siting issue, Golden said he does not favor legislation which would take away local control over where those facilities would be situated. He also said he is in favor of recycling and refuse-to-energy solid waste facilities, noting that the "future of solid waste landfill sites is extremely limited."

Cohasset sewage treatment

Congressional candidate Crampton, who recently left a top-level administrative position with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to run for Congress in the 10th District, publicly endorsed Cohasset's alternative proposal to a state-mandated plan for increasing the town's sewage treatment capacity.

Crampton, who recently left a top-level administrative position with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to run for Congress in the 10th District, publicly endorsed Cohasset's alternative proposal to a state-mandated plan for increasing the town's sewage treatment capacity.

The state's plan is projected to cost as much as 30 million dollars.

The alternative developed by Sewer Comissioner Charlie DeSantis would cut the cost by half and, unlike the state's plan, quickly and completely end all ocean dumping of sewage.

"I have carefully reviewed the plan that Cohasset wants to implement," Crampton said, "and I back it one-hundred percent. This is exactly the type of solution that government at all levels should be looking for. Frequently, bigger and more expensive does not necessarily mean better. As I said when I first announced my candidacy, the days of big government knows best, and bigger government knows best of all are over."

Campaign rules

During the upcoming months the Mariner will be publishing campaign information as it is deemed useful information for the voting public.

There are two guidelines used in the policy of publishing campaign news. The Mariner is responsible for informing voters about their choices among those seeking political office. Therefore, the news releases will include information about the candidate's background, qualifications, goals and opinions on pertinent issues, as well as local meetings where the candidate can be met first hand.

The second necessity for the Mariner's campaign news policy is to insure, in as much as it is possible, that each candidate is fairly and equitably represented.

In the Sept. 5 issue we will publish a brief synopsis for each candidate in each race. And there are a lot of them this year, including election for U.S. Senator and U.S. Congressman.

Candidates Corner is published weekly in response to the candidates' listings of fundraisers and coffees. Those are to be kept relatively brief. Candidates Corner, for those politicians facing contested races in the Sept. 18 primary, will conclude at the end of August. Those in uncontested contests may still make known their schedules and views through that forum.

Following the primary the candidates for the November election may rejoin space in Candidates Corner.

The Mariner's goal in publishing information on campaigns is to keep the community informed without overburdening readers with devoting space to superfluous or undue information. That, of course, is editorial judgment and it will be made here.

It is not an easy matter to seem to be fair to those who are seeking public office and who are aware they need public exposure.

This is clear to us, however. Our first responsibility is to the community of voters. We will see that they are informed as the paper is used as a strong political forum that makes clear the choices for the voters, not superfluous ones.

The Mariner will publish no letters for or against a candidate within a week of election. All letters challenging or supporting candidates up to that time must be written responsibly for publication.

News about incumbents who are still in the process of representation while seeking reelection will be published if that information is pertinent to the representation rather than to the campaign.

Golden meetings

U.S. Sen. Paul Tsongas will be the guest speaker at a continental brunch for Candidate Golden to be held at the home of Dennis Scollins of Linden Avenue, Marshfield, Aug. 18 from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Those interested in attending should contact Annie Federico at 837-5736 or Susan Phippen at 545-2788.

Two coffees will be held for Golden in Marshfield Saturday, Aug. 11. Bob and Barbara Trangione will be hosting a coffee at 7 p.m. and Ed and Nancy Hicks of Black Mount Drive will be hosting one at 9 p.m. If you're interested in attending a coffee or volunteering to help in his campaign, contact Annie Federico at 837-5736.

Golden will participate in two debates aired on Cable TV. One will be Aug. 8 at 8 p.m., the second on Sept. 10 at 8 p.m.

Shamie endorsed

Republican National Convention Delegate Pat Buckley and GOP Town Committee Chairman Juliette Guild of Cohasset have endorsed Ray Shamie in the 1984 U.S. Senate race in Massachusetts. Shamie is being challenged by Elliot Richardson in the September 18 primary.

They join a host of prominent Republicans in an endorsement that will run in the state's largest political newspaper. It reads: "Thanks to President Reagan, our nation is headed in the right direction. It's time Massachusetts sends him some support. That's why we endorse Ray Shamie for the U.S. Senate."

Bill Golden

Bill Golden, candidate for State Senator from the Norfolk/Plymouth District says, clogged courts are ineffective courts.

Speaking to a meeting of his campaign workers at the home of Susan Phippen in Scituate, Golden said crime, particularly violent crime, is a serious problem in today's society.

Golden, who was actively involved in a District Attorney's office during his law school days, has also served as a trial attorney in criminal cases.

"I have seen the law from both sides," he stated, "and it's obvious that our courts need active legislative support if they are to be effective.

"Court procedures must be overhauled if crime in our society is to be impacted in any substantive manner. Clogged courts are ineffective courts. The courts must be swift and just or the system grinds to a halt.

"The word must get out that lawbreakers will be punished swiftly, surely, and consistently, and that those who are not guilty will be vindicated quickly. The fundamental principals of justice require balance, so that both the defendant's and the victim's rights are safeguarded."

Golden has been instrumental in founding the D.O.V.E. shelter for victims of domestic abuse on the South Shore and continues to actively work to raise funds to assist this shelter.

In addition, he has provided free legal service to the organization.

Golden has a real concern for youth on the South Shore, and feels that one solution to juvenile crime is to help young people become involved in positive experiences.

To this end he has coached Little League baseball teams and was senior high fellowship director at the North Community Church in Marshfield, the same church where generations of his family are buried.

The candidate stressed that the present boondoggle in the courts should be addressed at the legislative level.

"Word processors and other technological aids don't sound very dramatic or exciting," he stated, "but these are the tools that will enable our courts and our police departments to move swiftly and justly, and the Legislature must fund them.

For further information, please call Susan Phippen at 545-2788.

Flynn calls for land transfer

Peter Y. Flynn, democratic candidate for Congress from the Tenth Congressional District, has written to the United States Department of Interior urging it to give back "most, if not all" of the remaining 753 acres of land that once served as a military reservation.

The land, located in Hingham and Cohasset, was "essentially loaned to the federal government during World War II — and, with the clear understanding, that it would be given back," Flynn wrote in a letter to Robert Gift, Chief of the Interior Department's Division of Federal Services.

Wrote Flynn: "The people of Hingham, Cohasset, and surrounding towns strongly favor return of the land. I have yet to run into anyone who does not (1) believe the land should be given back, and (2) advocates keeping it in its natural, wooded state."

Walking Tour

The Cohasset Historical Society holds its first 1984 summer Sunday afternoon historical walking tour this coming Sunday, Aug. 12 at 3 p.m. The tour will meet at the Maritime Museum, Elm Street, Cohasset Center and will walk along Elm Street, once called "the road to Ship Cove."

Roger Leonard of the Cohasset Historical Commission will describe some of the old homes once belonging to Cohasset's Sea Captains and Mariners. Cohasset Harbor once was the site of a thriving mackerel fishing business which was the mainstay of the town's economy. At the harbor, Leonard will talk about Cohasset's shipbuilding era and will point out the sites of buildings and wharves once located at the head of the Cove but no longer there.

From the head of the Harbor the walking tour will pass along Border Street to ancient Bates' Wharf where Charles Fink of the Cohasset Harbor Committee will talk about the town's "Age of Sail", the two centuries in which Cohasset was a fishing port and mackerel played a major role in the lives of its residents.

From there the tour will move to Government Island, where Society Curator David Wadsworth will talk about the construction and history of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse. Both first and second Minot's Lights will be discussed at the site where the second lighthouse was first assembled before being taken out to sea and reassembled on the dangerous Outer Minot's Ledge.

Following this, a shuttle bus is available for the return trip to the Society's Maritime Museum where light refreshments will be served. A donation of $1 is asked of all attending. For further info. please call the Society at 383-0773 or 383-6930.

Non profit agency eyed for SS Vo-Tech

FOUNDATION STUDY PANEL APPROVED

The South Shore Vocational School Committee agreed to establish a study committee to investigate the possibility of establishing a non-profit South Shore Foundation to channel grant money, donations and equipment to the South Shore Vo-Tech post-secondary institute, slated to begin this September.

The eight-town regional school committee approved the plan despite some concerns by members about the costs of further expansions at the school, which recently opened a campus in Abington. The original campus is in Hanover.

The committee stressed that no funds would be committed at this point. Supt. Clifford Easton said it could cost about $1,000 in legal fees to establish the foundation for tax exempt status with the IRS, but hopes to convince an attorney to donate his time for legal services.

Easton proposed a separate board of directors for the foundation which would administer funding that may be channelled to the program. The institute would be eligible for funds from Fortune 500 Companies, principal businesses and corporations in the state, state and national foundations and individual bequeathments, he said.

He recommended that he and a member of the committee be named members ex officio, with the majority of the board being school alumni.

The committee unanimously approved the plan, although several members voiced reservations about costs. Norwell rep Bob Molla, Cohasset rep David Chittam and Hanson member Catherine Douglas expressed concerns about the speed of recent expansions in the school, and asked Easton for more information before funds are alloted for the proposal.

The superintendent said he would present further information at the committee meeting tonight, (Wednesday, Aug. 8) at the Hanover school library.

COMMITTEE HIRES FORMER MEMBER

The VoTech District Committee voted 4-2 Wednesday to hire former member Richard Silvia of Cohasset to fill a vacancy as teacher in the automotive department.

Silvia is a former Industrial Arts teacher in Marshfield, owned a garage, and has been a representative for General Motors. He resigned from the regional school committee a little over a month ago.

Silvia was recommended for the post by Supt. Clifford Easton, automotive teachers and Asst. Supt. Warren Anderson, although his application for the position was recieved after the deadline. Easton said the former committee member had verbally applied for the $21,050 position before submitting his resume.

Voting in favor of Silvia's employment were David Chittam of Cohasset, Catherine Douglas of Hanson, Lloyd Patriquin of Whitman and Walter Easttey of Abington. Norwell's Bob Molla and Rockland rep John Doyle voted against the recommendation.

Also hired by the committee were:

—Cosmetology teacher Rita Ferreira, at $18,177. Ferreira has 12 years experience in public schools and beauty acadamies and is certified for academic and vocational teaching. She will be one of two teachers for the department.

—HVAC teacher James Peters, at $20,160. Peters has 13 years of teaching experience, and his hiring brings the heating, ventilation and air conditioning department to its original two-member teaching staff.

—George Clemmy, at $16,194, will teach the trade portion in the graphic arts department. Clemmy is not certified as a teacher but is an expert in the graphic arts field.

FUNDING WOES

The South Shore VoTech budget may have a $77,000 deficit this year, according to a memo to the district committee by Treasurer Robert Kelley.

Kelley said the deficit could be offset by receipts, but warned that there would be nothing left in the budget to upgrade equipment and course materials as planned in the spring.

Supt. Clifford Easton, who acknowledged that some areas in the budget were underestimated this year, proposed some short-term savings to offset the shortfall. He proposed shaving expenses from afternoon student custodial assistance in Hanover, maintenance overtime in Abington, summer help, snow removal overtime and building checks. Other savings could come from energy conservation measures and pupil transportation. Easton proposed cutting funds from the VICA travel expenses, but assured the committee that alternative ways to fund the student's travelling to competition would be found. He also pointed to savings on an Abington cleaning service contract and $5,000 in miscellaneous savings.

Several members, including Molla and Hanover's non-voting representative Dennis Blackwell, had reservations about cutting from funds for equipment in order to offset the deficit.

HANOVER ADDITION STUDIED

The regional committee voted to establish a study subcommittee to look into a new proposal by Easton for an addition to the Hanover school. The committee will be named by Chairman Walter Easttey of Abington.

REGULAR MEETING AUG. 8

The regional board will meet tonight (Aug. 8) at 7:30 p.m. in the Hanover campus library.

The committee will reorganize and Chairman Easttey will make presentations to three former board members. The panel will also consider a presentation on the English curriculum, student handbook approval, school lunch policy and administrative staff salary recommendations for 84/85.

The committee will also hear a special report on programs, public relations and fund raising proposals for the new Technical Institute. Also on the agenda are discussions on VICA funding alternatives and cost obligations for a regional competition at the school; the South Shore Chamber of Commerce Education Foundation; the Planning Goals Survey and price quotes from selected vendors on a computer network.

By Joan Pinkham

Those of us who are lucky enough to work at home are quick to agree that it's the best of both worlds. If there's a busy day looming, you can get up with the birds and put in a few hours of writing before the world comes alive. If you have pre-schoolers, you work while they nap and if your offspring are in school, there you are, ready with cookies and milk when they walk in the door. While those in the work-a-day world spend small fortunes on their wardrobes we can answer the phone in jeans and bare feet. Both Linda LeBlanc and Rose Hickey have pre-schoolers and a flair for cooking — they combined their love of both and so it was that the "Cozy Kitchen," their catering service, was started over a year ago. Everything from old Yankee dishes to Rose's native Mexican foods are offered their clients and when they go to work in the kitchen of Linda's old-fashioned farmhouse, they include a lot of little surprises and unusual touches that make it fun for all. Linda collected a number of old New England recipes while in college in Maine and because it's blueberry season, the girls are sharing with us this recipe called

BLUEBERRY CRISP

4 c. blueberries
1/3 c. sugar
2 tsp. fresh lemon juice
4 T butter
1/3 c. each brown sugar and flour
3/4 c. quick-cooking oats

Put berries in 1½ qt. baking dish. Sprinkle with sugar and lemon juice. Cream butter and sugar. Blend in flour. Add oats and spread over berries. Bake at 375 for 40 min. Best served warm with vanilla ice cream, or whipped cream.

The fragrance of herbs is in the air when you visit Helen Oshima at her Fern Hill Herb Farm. Her love of growing herbs at her Taylor St. home in Pembroke has led to over two hundred varieties in the garden where she conducts tours. She also lectures on herbal uses which include making wreaths, teas and moth preventatives. To discourage the latter from chomping on your woolens, she suggests an orange stuck full of whole cloves in your closet. For an eye wash, Helen recommends boiling 1/2 c. water for 5 min. poured over 1/2 tsp. each chamomile and fennel seed. Strain, cool, use at once, as it does not keep. Her recipes tell of ways to make perfumes and cologne water, a potpourri of flower petals and this timely dish of

4 large tomatoes
Salt and pepper
2 T each chopped fresh dill or basil
1 tsp. celery seed
1/2 c. coarse bread crumbs, dried
4 tsp. butter

Remove stem ends from tomatoes without cutting flesh. Cut them in half. Do not peel. Place cut side up in baking dish. Sprinkle with all ingredients. Dot with butter. Bake at 400 degrees for 15 min.

Great wedding, but the honeymoon . . .

By Lou Levin Cutler

No, you don't have to come over and watch the home movies of our honeymoon trip. Truth is, there aren't any. But I'm sure all our friends in the Mariner towns would love to hear the titillating details of our honeymoon. David Cutler, publisher of these proud hometown papers, and I were married July 28. Just your regular 'ole affair at home. Mom and girl friends worked hard on the flowers, my daughter was adorable in her pink frilly dress, and one of my sons fell, had a bloody nose and bleeding mouth with incalculable amounts of blood spurting all over David and the maid-of-honor, three minutes before the guests were to arrive for the ceremony. Just your regular 'ole at home wedding.

Anyone who's foolish enough to get remarried at home with four children deserves her fate, I told myself later, after discovering that in all the confusion, the beautiful handmade bridal bouquet Mom had painstakingly made that afternoon got left in the refrigerator during the service. Sort of like the cranberry sauce at Thanksgiving.

Our nerves were shattered, but we pulled ourselves together, and it was a beautiful wedding ceremony with loved-ones and close friends. And afterwards, with a feeling of exhilaration, we left grandparents and kids, and departed for . . . the Honeymoon.

When the groom awoke the next morning with a bad head-cold, I should have taken a clue. But no, romance was in the air, and with sunny skies and too much luggage, we flew off to Nantucket.

If you've never been there, you've got to go. Nowhere is there a larger concentration of beautiful people, beautiful scenery, beautiful weather, beautiful food, and beau-ti-ful prices. We were quickly caught up in the atmosphere of whaling legends, charming guest houses, long walks on cobblestone lanes, and . . . mopeds.

Now, bicycles are really the most popular kind of transportation on Nantucket, but with the groom's headcold developing into infected sinuses and a nasty cough, we decided that 'moped' motorcycles were more our speed. I use the term "we" generously.

Always careful of details, I listened very intently to the mere child (maybe 18) at the rental shop who explained safety instructions, rules of the road, and numerous cautions when riding a moped. Not once did he say to me, "Are you sure you want to do this?" All he had to have done was ask.

But romance, and now adventure, were in the air, so I didn't take a clue from all those cautions, and rented it. The groom, you see, was back at the inn with that nasty cold, so I had been sent to procure the death weapon for the next day.

And it was a glorious day. We set off early in the morning with towels and books, every bit the "honeymooners," to explore a bit and then find a quiet beach. And then it happened.

Two inexperienced moped-enthusiasts were stopped in our lane, a car was coming at us in the other lane, and that was it . . . the End of the Honeymoon. David managed to keep us from being hit, but not before we both sailed over the handle bars, slid down the asphalt badly scraping tissue on arms and legs, and needless to say, ruining that cute little kid's moped.

We were lucky to be alive. David landed on his chest in the process of sliding, and was stunned. For five minutes, he couldn't remember what had happened. People stopped, the police and ambulance arrived, and the male member of the couple who had been in our lane and contributed to the accident, began to yell at his wife.

I was scared to death that David was seriously hurt. Having landed on him, I was less severely injured.

With the ambulance came the EMT, "Frank," dressed in docksiders, khaki pants, and a navy-blue alligator shirt (what else . . this was Nantucket!) who checked for broken bones. Both of David's legs were immobilized in temporary casts against possible fractures, an arm was bandaged and put in a sling, and numerous tests were run before we were put into the ambulance. Once assured that he was all right, and the worst of the bleeding was stopped, I looked back at David with two legs and an arm in casts, and would have given anything for a camera. The photo would have made a wonderful honeymoon keepsake.

That about sums up the honeymoon. Did I mention this was on the second day of our seven-day trip? A vacation we had been promising ourselves for months?

We spent the next two days bleeding and writhing in pain, trying to be brave, and resisting the temptation to hit the next person who said to us sympathetically, "Well, at least you'll have something to remember about your honeymoon."

The fifth and sixth days were spent hobbling the four blocks to town for meals, having had pizza brought in for two days. David experienced what the handicapped must endure every day when people try to act like they aren't staring and wincing at what you look like, and yet they are.

Our innkeepers at the Island Reef Guest House, Ernie and Jane Davis, were very kind. Ernie went out the first night of the accident to buy the additional anesthetic the doctor had quite seriously instructed me David was going to need . . . a bottle of Vodka.

The "locals" who met us immediately reacted with, "Moped accident, right? Got no use for those things."

ABC Sports broadcast 457 hours of Olympics coverage that week. We saw it all.

But we did reaffirm that we could get along very well under stress. A good feeling to come out of a honeymoon with. And just today, David informed me that he's very confident that we can safely kiss in about two weeks without causing each other excruciating pain.

I informed him today that we owe ourselves a trip.

Young People's Theatre entertains Broadway style

By Corinne A. Kutish

Play Review

The Young People's Summer Theatre has a penchant for choosing sophisticated Broadway musical comedies, and then putting on extremely enjoyable performances. Case in point was last weekend's three-night run of "On the Twentieth Century" at Scituate High School.

Cast entirely with young people from the South Shore, ages 12 to 23, "On the Twentieth Century" was a rollicking good evening of demanding songs, high-stepping dances and perfectly-timed comedy. The title refers to the luxury liner the "Twentieth Century Limited," the Queen Mary of trains, which covered the New York to Chicago route during the 1930's.

On board, we discover Oscar Jaffee (David Todd, a Scituate summer resident), an overly-flamboyant and temporarily down-and-out Broadway producer. His last play flopped in Chicago, but Oscar thumbs his nose at failure. His shrewd plan is to convince his former leading lady and lover, Lily Garland (Paula Kelley of East Weymouth) to sign on with him again.

The scene then flashes back to the moment several years earlier when Oscar "discovered" Lily, then known as Mildred Plotka. In this scene, Paula Kelley displayed her impeccable comic timing as a bespectacled accompanist hunched over her piano.

After she is fired for correcting the singing of an auditioning star (Jodi Capeless of North Easton), Lily/Mildred, with fiery pride, demands repayment of her 20¢ bus fare. Oscar Jaffee then declares, striking a dramatic profile, that she can be a star.

"The flame is there inside of you," he announces, and christens her Lily Garland.

The play then returns to the action on the train, where it becomes apparent that Lily no longs needs Oscar and his shady deals. Nevertheless, she still loves him.

Enter religious nut Leticia Primrose (Beth Flynn of Scituate), the wealthy patent medicine lady, who now uses her money for the espousal of religion. Flynn is a crowd-pleaser with her song "Repent". Waltzing and cavorting her plump frame across the stage, she admonished the audience to "Stop those dirty little doings."

Oscar gets a revelation and decides to stage the story of Mary Magdalene, starring Lily. He finds a bible and declares, "They just don't write dialog like this any more."

Meanwhile, Oscar's two henchmen, Oliver and Owen (Bill White of Scituate and Bob Gertsen of Hanover), encounter Mrs. Primrose and convince her to fund the production. All Oscar has to do is convince Lily.

A wonderful duet follows between Oscar and Lily, as Paula Kelley as Lily maintains "I've got it all," and David

On the Twentieth Century

Todd as Oscar counters "You've lost it." Both Kelley and Todd have powerful pleasing voices that are a real joy to listen to.

Perhaps the most enjoyable song and dance routine comes in the second act, however, when it is discovered that Mrs. Primrose is a real "nut", escaped that day from a sanitarium. On board come hospital attendants (Tom Fusco and Sue MacPhetres) to claim her and pandemonium breaks out.

Singing "She's a nut", the entire company rushes back and forth across the stage while the elusive Mrs. Primrose cunningly dodges them. We see her waving to the audience from the nose of the train and then making faces from the caboose. At the same time a strobe light is used to make the whole scene appear like a Keystone Cops silent picture chase.

In the end, Oscar feigns dying in order to trick Lily into signing the contract. She double-crosses him, however, signing not her name, but "Peter Rabbit." The show then ends on a happy note, as Oscar and Lily embrace and laugh at each other.

The show has a number of other engaging scenes, including a clever duet between Oscar and Lily's neck-nuzzling boyfriend, Bruce Granit (Doug Mathews of Scituate). Singing "Mine", while peering at a "mirror" that separates their train compartments, the two rivals harmonized over their desire to keep/get back Lily.

Also appearing in the show were Alicia Hommen, Andy Salvador, Chris Lee, Kim Karlberg, Ken Agress, Arthur Beecher and Gordon Agress, all of Scituate; Chris Roman of Pembroke; Sean Fagan of Kingston; Lindsey Berents of Cohasset; Greg Palmer and Ellen Sheehan of Marshfield; and Brian Mack of North Easton.

The chorus was large and well-rehearsed, including young people from Scituate, Norwell, Cohasset, Marshfield, Hanover and Pembroke.

Complementing this outstanding performance was an excellent orchestra, including Karol Spinola, Sue Sylvester, Maurice Ling, David Cross, Lisa Porter, David Hermance, Steve LaFabre, Andy Bergsten and Tom Teare.

The Young People's Summer Theatre was started eight years ago by the show's talented director Donald Capen and fellow thespian, Peter Tolan. Capen organized the group to teach the theatrical process to young people in his high school English and drama classes. With "On the Twentieth Century," Capen has once again produced a thoroughly professional show, bringing out the maximum of talent from these young people.

Home Care Service requests

The Massachusetts Department of Elder Affairs plans to issue Requests for Proposals (RFP's) for home care services across the state (and the Scituate-Cohasset-Hingham area) over the next three year period.

This action brings the Department of Elder Affairs into compliance with Administration and Finance Regulation which requires all vendors in the state participate in an RFP process at least every three years.

Previous policy of contracting with Home Care Corporations without an RFP process has been criticized by the state's Auditor.

DEA is committed to an open RFP process and to the assurance of elder participation in the running of agencies that serve them. Home care services are provided to more than 43,000 elders annually.

The Department of Elder Affairs expects to issue the RFP to the first group of nine service areas in September, 1984.

They are: Boston (3), Greater Brockton, Cape Cod, Martha's Vineyard, and Nantucket, The Dedham, Canton, Foxborough and Wrentham areas, Greater Fall River, Greater New Bedford and the Weymouth, Cohasset and Scituate areas.

Grant proposals will be due at the Department of Elder Affairs in January, 1985 and grant awards become effective as of the beginning of the Fiscal Year 1986. RFP's will be issued for the rest of the state over the following two years.

Once upon a time, not so far away,
a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.
There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.
Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.
Now it's coming true again.
All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.
Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

A year-round person in a summer place

By Lois Martin

For a whole month I'd been there, rushing home after errands only to do a few odds and ends before deciding I'd done enough in a day.

Never once had I explored my new environs. I'd seen it, for years even. I've never been unaware of Humarock. But certainly I have not known it from the perspective of a resident.

So last week I leashed Lill (that's a dog, you know) and headed down the road to explore my new digs.

I had never walked across the Julian Street Bridge. It's mostly constructed of wood and it's bordered by a bit of space that fosters wild flowers. Beneath the bridge ran the South River, swift and sure. And then, and then I saw what I had known but never realized.

PATCHES

A summer place, for gosh sakes. I live in a summer place. Facing the river on either side are pleasant smallish homes. Most sport robust flowers in pots and boxes. Children were swimming and a woman was sunning and boats were docking. A summer place.

I've lived near water most of my life. Now and then I've had the liberty to be a summer person. But I've never truly lived in a summer place. I've lived in towns and communities. They were my homes as this place is. But this is an area, a colony independent almost in itself, though dependent and interacting with the primary towns of which it is part but not the whole.

I saw the headquarters for the South Humarock Civic Association. Then I skirted its yard to march into the river after leaving my shoes on the shore. Mind you, I was clothed in a summer frock while others who were in the water wore bathing suits. But the river met and wet my feet and legs as effectively as it did those of authentically garbed bathers. Besides, Lill was on a leash and together we were secured for a brief, refreshing wade.

Out of that body of water I turned to look behind and saw the white sandy beginnings of the ocean's path. I walked across the street and then over a little knoll directly into the Atlantic Ocean. Imagine.

Shoes now permanently off, we did the ocean, skirt and slip soaked but wondrously of the drip dry variety. We waded as the day waned leaving only a cluster of men and women on the shore to settle what had not been discussed. They sat in threes according to sexes, much like the parlor and the kitchen breakdowns they might have at home. Retired, I thought. The women were browned and wearing Talbot-type one-piece bathing suits that bespoke the smart sport. The men wore two-piece coordinated beach wear. Topped in their washable Bing Crosby hats they polished off a cigar and conversation with the sun threatening to set a bit sooner than the day before.

We headed back, my shorter, red-haired companion and I, drying as we moved across the bridge again. I picked a few of the wild flowers I deemed to be owned by God in that small spot near the bridge's beginnings. I figured I could always repay with a healthy begonia slip if outraged ownership surfaced.

There were, within my Shady/Ridge area, neighbors completing the day's review. With one of them I walked to the end of the lane.

The narrow dirt road smelled of cedar and the birds over the marsh out back were more industrious than my neighbor and I. She spoke of how the tide's a devil about twice a year, flooding the area and making new marks. I pictured myself on the rooftop during that time. And I decided not to ruin the day by asking how things had been for her in the Blizzard of '78. I knew how they'd been for me, inland, and there, in that new home, part of summer's place, between the marsh and the river with the ocean at the river's outskirts, it must have been something else.

I met another neighbor, the one whose home I can see from the breezeway. She's planning to go to her 63rd high school reunion in a couple of weeks. Marvelous. An authentic graduate of Weymouth in the Class of '21. They must have been a great group . . . 'cause they still appear to be.

Back inside my house I put the wild flowers in a pitcher given to me by a friend who went to a wonderful country of which I know little.

I was telling Terry about everything I'd seen when another neighbor dropped by with string beans and a cuke, fresh from their own crops.

Wonderful to learn of one's spot, a privilege to use the freedom to wade in two bodies of water within minutes distance, clothes and all. Now I have complete understanding of why the air is an anesthetic at night.

I knew there was something unique when I met Damon, my paper person, a month ago, who's working like a demon to get enough customers for passes to Nantasket Park. And once I get my Globe delivery man to put that paper up on the porch so I won't have to run out in the winter in my nightie for the news, I'll be entirely at home and in command of what is a charming new experience. A summer place . . . at least till one of those tides they're telling me about drives me to a winter awakening.

Church news

Director resigns

Scott Fischer, Director of Christian Education at the Second Congregational Church, has found it necessary to resign in order to accept a position with another church. Beginning in September, he will serve as Associate Minister in the Hingham Congregational Church. Though we are sorry to see him go, we wish him well in his ministry. Our Christian Education Committee has extended Scott the church's gratitude for his work here during the past year.

Following is part of Scott's letter of resignation: Although I embark on a new journey with great anticipation and excitement, at the same time it is with a sad heart that I leave this beautiful group of people called the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset, who have welcomed me warmly in their midst, supported me in my ministry, and loved me as I am.

It is at least some comfort knowing that we will still be a part of the same community, the town of Cohasset, and it is my hope that our friendships will continue to grow.

My experience ministering with you and among you has added something special to my life and to my ministry, something that will always be within me. For that, and much more, I will be forever grateful.

I pray God's blessing and care be upon you, and may your ministry in Cohasset continue to grow and blossom under his guidance.

Musings

☐It was a Republican, naturally, who inserted these items in the Congressional Record: Large cities such as New York are filled with Republicans, up until 5 p.m. At this point, there is a phenomenon much like an automatic washer starting the spin cycle. People begin pouring out of every exit of the city. These are Republicans going home.

☐Democrats eat the fish they catch. Republicans hang them on the wall.

☐Republicans have guest rooms. Democrats have spare rooms filled with old baby furniture.

☐Democrats suffer from chapped hands and headaches. Republicans have tennis elbow and gout.

August can be an unsettling month

Thirty years ago, within the space of 11 days, two hurricanes lashed southeastern Masssachusetts. On August 31, 1954, Hurricane Carol took the area by surprise, killing 68 men, women and children. Hundreds of fishing vessels and pleasure craft were wrecked by an unmerciful beating from wind and waves.

Eleven fishermen were lost as the New Bedford scalloper Redstart went down as she struggled to make port in mountainous seas. Other boats were left high and dry along the shore, reduced to mere fish-like skeletons. The streets of lovely old towns were littered with fallen trees, wires, and storm debris of every description.

The coastlines of Connecticut, Rhode Island, the South Coast of Massachusetts and Cape Cod bore the brunt of this storm, but even far from the sea, inland towns saw roofs torn off and tall trees uprooted. This storm tracked inland from Westhampton, Long Island, through Connecticut, west of Worcester, then through central New Hampshire to Quebec, Canada.

Winds gusted to 135 MPH on Block Island and 105 MPH at Providence. The storm weakened as it plowed inland but extensive crop and forest damage occurred along its path.

The hurricane winds do much damage, but drowning is the greatest cause of hurricane deaths. As the storm approaches and moves across the coastline, it brings massive waves and storm tides which may reach 25 feet or more above normal. This rise may come rapidly and is called a storm surge. This is a great dome of water often 50 miles wide, that comes sweeping across the coastline near where the eye of the hurricane makes land fall. The stronger the hurricane, the higher the storm surge will be. This is the most dangerous part of a hurricane and nine out of ten hurricane fatalities are caused by the surge.

The second hurricane, Edna, was well-advertised and found the area well prepared and waiting on the morning of September 11, 1954. But only the fringe of the storm actually affected most of our region, hitting the Cape hardest. Martha's Vineyard recorded a gust of 120 MPH and torrential rains fell on the wreckage of the first storm, with 21 deaths being reported. Fifteen hurricanes classified as "extreme" have affected the Massachusetts coastal area since 1635. Will history repeat itself this year?

July Summary

July, 1984 was wet and cloudy with a near normal temperature regime. We had no severe local storms, but tornadoes accompanying heavy thunderstorms were reported to have touched down in western Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Hampshire. Precipitation for July was above average and it was the eleventh consecutive month with more precipitation than normal.

The satellite that provides pictures for the eastern half of the nation failed on July 29. The failure comes at the beginning of the hurricane season, when satellite images are crucial in locating and tracking tropical storms. The satellite that normally provides West Coast weather pictures is being moved to the center of the country to cover both coasts.

In other weather news, a large flaming object fell out of the sky into Puget Sound near Lummi Island in the state of Washington. For years, authorities have tried to explain sightings of unidentified flying objects (UFO's) as being weather balloons, swamp gas, or other natural phenomena. They can't pass this sighting off as easily as others. People on board the fishing vessel Steva 10 reported seeing the UFO fall out of the sky and into the water at 3:45 a.m. on July 27, creating a wall of water 75 to 100 feet high. According to descriptions received by the Coast Guard, "the object dropped straight and then did a U-turn and went up and came back down." "Investigators couldn't find anything," said Jan Leonard of the Whatcom County Department of Emergency Services, "but there's not much question something hit the water." I wonder what the object was? It was not a weather balloon or meteorite, so your guess is as good as mine.

Total precipitation for July, at my station in Marshfield, was 3.99 inches, 1.23 inches above normal. The maximum 24-hour precipitation was 1.40 inches on the 7th. Rain, .01 inch or more, occurred on 12 days with a trace on three days. Total precipitation this year has been 38.8 inches, 14.97 inches above normal.

The mean temperature was 71.3 degrees, .90 degrees below normal. The average daily maximum reading was 81.1 degrees, while the average daily minimum was 61.6 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 48 degrees on the 9th, with a high reading of 93 degrees on the 14th.

There were eight cloudy days, 18 partly cloudy days, and five clear days. The average wind speed was 9.9 MPH; normal is 10.8 MPH. The highest observed gust was 46 MPH on July 7.

August Outlook

The month of August, 1984 will be unsettled with changeable weather patterns. No major storms are indicated, but there could be frequent showers or thunderstorms. The month will be cloudy and the amount of precipitation should be near normal.

Weather Question and Answer

Q. What did a hurricane have to do with Napoleon's marriage?

A. On August 13, 1766, a tropical cyclone devastated the village of Trois Islets, on the island of Martinique in the West Indies. The vast plantation of Joseph Gaspard Tascher was destroyed; his fortune declined. His daughter, Marie Josephine Rose, returned to France to escape impending poverty. There she met a young army officer, Napoleon Bonaparte. They married and he rose to power. She became Empress Josephine of France because a hurricane changed the course of her destiny.

Have a good day and a nice forever.

Park interpreter lets Mother Nature do the teaching

By Elisabeth Gorfinkle

Wompatuck State Park's nature interpreter, Jerry Flaherty, has a pioneering attitude about teaching natural science to park visitors. He believes in taking them to Nature and letting her do most of the talking.

Last Thursday he demonstrated his teaching method on an unsuspecting reporter as he drove her to a remote section of the 2800-acre park called the Nature Study Area where 200-year-old trees stand.

Flaherty explained that most people don't realize the majority of park trees are less than 100 years old and quite undersized. The older trees, save for about five acres in the study area, were cut down for lumber and cleared farmland before the area became an ammunition depot in 1941. Wompatuck was created in 1968 when the state bought the acreage from the federal government for $300,000, he said.

As the reporter stared into a wood of mammoth hemlock, pine, beech, oak and black birch, the wiry man next to her dressed in hiking shorts and boots began to make a low warble sound in his throat.

He said he was imitating the call of a screech owl because birds are attracted to the sound of their predators. "They want to spot the owl before the owl spots them," he said.

Soon the rustle of wind through ancient trunks was broken by sweet song, and Flaherty, a skilled bird watcher, started naming the singers.

Earlier during an interview in his headquarters inside the park's visitors' center, Flaherty said he had been teaching natural science at Wompatuck since 1980, when the state asked him to pilot the park's interpretive program, which runs during July and August each year.

Before the interpretive program came into being, Flaherty said he had spent summers teaching campcraft at Thayer Academy's day camp in Braintree and then natural science topics at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell.

He first became interested in natural science through bird watching with nature enthusiasts 15 years ago, the same time he started teaching fifth grade at Scituate's Cushing School. The 47-year-old father of five said many of the children he meets in his interpretive programs are inspiring in their eagerness to learn and in their knowledge of nature.

"The heart of the program is outdoor-oriented. If it rains, it puts the screw to it," he said. "Although my walks (and bike trips) have specific themes, I don't hesitate to change my focus if questions are raised or if spontaneous events occur. On a geology walk, a hawk came spiraling overhead and a kid was the first to notice it."

The state supports the bulk of the program, which is designed to explain the park's natural resources to visitors. Flaherty gives lectures on birds, wildflowers, geology, wetlands, astronomy and history.

The Appalachian Mountain Club, an organization interested in promoting outdoor education had sponsored the pilot program and still gives him a stipend to launch new ideas. Interpretive Services is part of the Department of Environmental Management, which runs Wompatuck. And Wompatuck is part of the state's northeast region of the forest and parks division. Flaherty said 28 interpreters teach in the region's 14 parks.

Flaherty's interpretive program grows each year with his expanding knowledge of the natural world. As an example, he explained how his astromony program, now held for two hours starting at 8 p.m. every Wednesday night, came to be part of his repertoire. The program consists of a slide show, film and lecture outdoors.

"I became interested in the stars by trying to watch migrating birds at night," he said, while his eyes seemed to track a starry sky.

"I could hear the 'lisp' sound of the birds even though I couldn't see them. The stars were conspicuous, so they got my attention.

"It has been proven through laboratory experiments that birds use celestial navigation. The constellation Cygnus, the swan, can be seen in the August and September sky. I call it the pathfinder. It's my symbol for the migration."

Jerry Flaherty holds a stuffed replica of a resident bird, an immature groshawk, at Wompatuck State Park. Flaherty is a park interpreter.

Flaherty continued to say he's very excited about his new program called Spacious Skies.

"It's about the appreciation of our atmosphere through kite flying and frisbees and studying atmospheric phenomena like clouds. Bird watchers are always looking up," he added.

Most of the interpretive programs offered are free to people of all ages.

Wompatuck State Park also offers visitors extensive recreational facilities and a 500-site campground. The telephone at the park is 749-7160.

Musings

By John H. Cutler

☐ If your guests stay too long just treat them like members of your family. They'll soon leave.

☐ You know you're in a small town when the editor and publisher of the local newspaper carries a camera at all times.

☐ Excerpts from newspapers:

The young lady who was going to be married, spent three months getting her torso ready.

Mrs. Smith, who attended Vassar College 20 years ago, never regained consciousness.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, wearing her mother's wedding gown.

☐ I didn't say he was dumb. I merely said the two most difficult courses he took in high school were algebra I and algebra I.

☐ Query: Who wrote a book entitled The Grass Is Always Greener Over the Septic Tank? Erma Bombeck, of course. Erma also said, "Housework, if it is done right, can kill you."

☐ The Democratic convention in San Francisco brought to mind one of Mark Twain's observations: "The coldest winter I ever spent was a summer in San Francisco."

THANK YOU, St. Anthony and St. Jude for prayers answered. F.A. (8/8)

PRAYER OF APPLICATION: To the Holy Spirit. Holy Spirit, you who solve all problems, who light all roads so that I can attain my goal, you who give me the devine gift to forgive and forget all evil against me and who in all instances of my life are with me. I want in this short prayer to thank you for all things and to confirm once again that I never want to be separated from you and even in spite of all material illusions, I wish to be with you in eternal glory. Thank you for your mercy toward me and mine. Repeat this prayer 3 consecutive days. After 3 days, the favor will be granted even though it may appear difficult. This prayer must be published immediately after favor is granted without mentioning the favor. Only your initials should appear at the bottom. D.S. (8/8)

DEQE returns Cohasset grant application

Cohasset and small communities throughout the United States. By writing off alternative systems, the state is disenfranchising all small communities who are participating in the grant program. It is clearly outside the authority of the DEQE to refuse to review this application, and certainly not in the spirit of the of the Clean Waters Act."

"Unacceptable" is how DeSantis described the DEQE's decision. "It's serious when we have unelected officials denying the benefits and intent of federal legislation to small communities," he said.

In what could be described as "dualing correspondence," letters have been flowing back and forth between the state and town for many months.

According to DEQE, "contrary to the understanding reached at our recent meeting (in July), Cohasset has submitted a Step 2/3 (design and construction plan) grant application in lieu of an application for Step 2 (just the design phase) planning advance. Moreover, this submittal was made in spite of the repeated statement by the Division that a Step 2/3 application would not receive grant funding. The reasons for not awarding a Step 2/3 grant (are contained in a previous letter) and need not be repeated. Contrary to your assertion, your actions do not move Cohasset closer to satisfying the outstanding consent decree, but instead will delay the implementation of the solution to your wastewater disposal problems."

DeSantis explained that the EPA has encouraged small communities such as Cohasset which are investigating alternative systems, to reduce the administration review time by combining the Step grant procedures.

DeSantis noted in his letter dated July 24 to the DEQE, that federal funding is reduced after September 30, "making the rewards for a Step 2/3 grant too advantgeous for the state, the federal government and our community to forego if there is any possibility of securing them."

But commissioner Cortese disagreed with that assumption, saying that all grant monies will be obligated prior to that date for communities presently on the FY-84 priority list.

In his July 24 correspondence, DeSantis stated it was Cohasset's opinion that the alternative collectors, as included in the Ward Engineering recommended plan, be funded at 94 percent, per regulations established by the EPA. He said, " Cohasset (to our knowledge) is the only town to spend its own money to develop a less expensive, more comprehensive, and environmentally less disruptive plan, a plans that includes, as federal regulations require, alternative collectors to reduce cost."

Cortese responded in no uncertain terms, that according to federal legislation, the state determines which projects received available funding for municipal wastewater treatment construction. And, he continued, "the top priority is the construction of wastewater treatment plants and major transmission systems (as advocated in the Metcalf and Eddy plan) so as to protect and enhance the waters of the Commonwealth." The state, he added, is delegated the authority to determine which ccommunities receive priority funding and "communities have not received federal funds for collector sewers (as advocated in the Ward Engineering plan) except for a limited period in 1976 and 1977."

Cortese added, "it is obvious that utilizing scare federal funds on collector sewers is neither acceptable nor consistent with the goals of the Clean Waters Act."

He noted, "in recapitulation of points made to you over many months, with the exception of the potential Hull connection, the direction in which you are attempting to lead the Cohasset pollution abatement program is not viable."

The commissioner reiterated that the time and money spent to compile the lengthy Step 2/3 grant application "is not in conformance with our program requirements, will not be considered, and will be returned to you."

DeSantis said the application is now at the EPA offices in Boston and a dialogue has been initiated.

Recreation members review pier plan

Town Hall be approved.

A uncertain future is not the only pressing concern confronting the Recreation Commission. Just recently, 17 fishermen have signed a petition renewing the debate over an extended pier.

This time, the proposed addition would amount to 41 feet and the price tag to $300,000 rather than the previously-rejected $500,000. According to one commission member, the new pier would allow for three more boats when the tide is low and possibly seven or eight when it is high.

The commission is as skeptical as ever about the proposals. They are afraid of accepting money from the government could jeapordize the Selectmen's jurisdiction over Government Island. The town could lose its right to restrict parking as well as its right to control the pier's fate.

Unofficially, the members feel that if all the funds could be provided by the town, the extension of the pier might be a more plausible reality. Justifying such a large expense for such a small minority of the town, however, seems unlikely.

The fact that proponents of the cause have scarcely grown in number since the last town meeting suggests to the commission that efforts may be becoming increasingly futile.

Summing up what he believes is a hasty new proposal designed to save face and recover lost enthusiasm, one member commented that the fishermen had made their biggest mistake when they "went ahead without touching all the bases."

A daily occurrence on Sandy Beach is viewed from the rocks. (Rose Cundari)

Selectmen discuss solutions to teen hangouts

A solution to the number of teens gathering each night at various hangouts in town is not around the corner. But the town will attempt, in conjunction with the police, school and recreation department, to find alternative activities for Cohasset youths.

Selectmen last week held a lengthy discussion on the problem of teens hanging around and drinking on public property. Vandalism on Government Island, Sandy Beach and in Whitney Woods, is on the increase, especially during the summer.

The police department has attempted to increase patrols, but the best procedure officers can follow is to disperse the youths from one area and initiate patrols at another location. With limited manpower, Chief Joseph Kealey told selectmen, officers can be at one location at a time, dispersing youths at intervals throughout the night.

The discussion began last week when selectmen chairman Clifford Mitman explained that one resident questioned how police handle underaged drinking on public property, and how the town can assist in controling teenage drinking.

Chief Kealey noted that since Sandy Beach is closed at 10 p.m., the youths travel from there to other local hangouts. Between that time and midnight, many of them stay at Government Island.

It is up to the judgement of the individual officer involved, as to how he handles underaged drinking of

The teens' view of 'what to do'

(Jeff Giles, a summer intern at the Mariner and a 1983 CHS graduate, was asked to solicit comments from local teens about the problems of drinking and gathering each night on public property. Ed.)

On any given night, anywhere between twenty and two hundred youths from Cohasset and a few neighboring towns are on the run from the police. The chase typically starts at Sandy Beach just after dark, and ends at Government Island or Whitney Woods about an hour later with a flash of blue lights through the trees.

Cohasset is no place for kids: the sentiment is a bitter one and at least as old as the high school itself. The frustration and hostility it generates among the town's young is perhaps just as old.

In the last few years, however, the problem has found a focal point: Sandy Beach after hours. During the summer months when warm weather encourages late-night gatherings at the Beach parking lot, the Cohasset Police have to start making some choices.

For years, their choice has been a simple one: spot check for alcohol, try to keep litter and vandalism to a minimum, and clear the whole place out at a reasonable hour.

Unfortunately, for the teenagers of this town who have nothing to do and nowhere to do it, the solution is hardly that simple. And this is where the police and the townspeople in general find themselves up against Artist admits portrait is good

By Corinne A. Kutish

In 1957 Robert Wilson of Cohasset, then living in Norwell, was commissioned by the Kennedy Foundation to paint a portrait of Joseph Kennedy, Jr. The large oil painting was to hang in a dormitory funded by the foundation and dedicated in honor of the slain World War II fighter pilot, at the Cardinal Cushing School and Training Center.

Now 27 years later and 40 years after the death of Joe Kennedy Jr., the artist remembers the occasion. Recently he stopped in to see the portrait, which he hadn't seen in over 20 years.

"I had forgotten it was so big," commented the 74-year-old artist. "It was a lot better than I remembered it, too."

A colorful speaker with distinct opinions, Robert Wilson spent only six years of his long art career painting portraits. Speaking from his comfortable home

Westwood job offered to Lanza

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza has been offered the position of Westwood Executive Secretary. Lanza will not accept the position until a salary is negotiated.

Lanza applied for the Westwood job along with more than 100 other applicants. He was one of two finalists interviewed this week by Westwood selectmen, and received a call Tuesday night informing him of their selection.

Lanza said he will be meeting with the Westwood town officials to discuss salary, and a decision will be made early next week.

The 27-year old Cohasset executive secretary will be attending his second year at New England School of Law. He is a graduate of Bridgewater State College, and received a master's degree in public administration from Suffolk University.

He has been executive secretary in Cohasset for the past year and a half. With six years of administrative experience, Lanza is one of the youngest public officials in the state. He was assistant executive secretary in Yarmouth before he was appointed to the Cohasset post.

Lanza now earns $25,000 a year in Cohasset. The salary for the Westwood job ranges from $28,000 to $33,000; a major factor in Lanza's decision to seek the position. The population in Westwood is about 14,000, compared to about 8000 in Cohasset.

Cohasset's week . . .

Harbor shellfish ban

The Cohasset Board of Selectmen has been notified by the DEQE that the ban on shellfishing in Cohasset Harbor due to "Red Tide" pollution has been lifted.

However, Shellfish Constable James F. Curley warns that due to additional pollution from an unknown source, the Harbor will remain closed to shellfishing until such time as the source had been identified and eliminated.

Future zoning bylaws

The sewer commissioners reviewed a July letter written by former Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous which states the Planning Board should consider imposing larger house lot requirements in the future.

Although the commission agreed with the intent of the letter, they will discuss the Title Five implications of such a change with the new health agent.

Eliopolous stated that the Board of Health recommended to the Planning Board that future consideration be given to increasing the square footage needed to construct a dwelling unit in Cohasset. The larger lots, which would mean fewer new homes in town, would eliminate many future sewer problem areas.

Pipe lines televised

Despite reluctance by the Water Commission to fund the project, the sewer commission will hire a special firm to televise the sewer lines along Atlantic Avenue for possible cracks occurred during street construction.

Sewer commissioners said the contractor for the reconstruction project, Geneva Construction, will not pay for the project unless a crack or leak is detected. But the commission said the firm is bonded, and the company will utlimately pay for the technical work. The televised projection of the sewer lines is estimated to cost about $750.

Sewer commissioner Charles DeSantis said the Water Commission has indicated it will not pay the cost for the project. The pipes will be televised within the next two weeks, although commissioners would like it completed during a high tide.

Treatment plant improvements

Sewer treatment plant supervisor Manuel Salvador submitted a list of items to the Sewer Commission which he determined are necessary to continue the operation of the facility.

Under the Ward Engineering plan, the Elm Street treatment plant would be converted to a pumping station.

Salvador listed a new control panel, at a total cost of approximately $10,000, as necessary to function the plant's two pumps efficiently. The commission members said they will talk with the plant supervisor to see if repairs could be made to the panel before a major expenditure is requested from the advisory committee.

Other items, such as an aerator and sludge pumps, which combined, total about $6000, have already been ordered for the plant.

No renovation allowed

The planning board this week refused a request by a Pond Street condominium resident to convert the basement into a family room.

Saying it would set a precedent which the board had opposed when 100 Pond Street was developed, health board members denied a request by the sister-in-law of School Supt. Eugene Crowell to renovate the basement into a family room.

The board members maintain that the family room may later be used as an extra bedroom. The septic system designed at 100 Pond Street is only capable of handling the specific number of bathrooms originally designed for the project. Board members said they must uphold their original approval of the condominium design and protect the septic system for future residents.

Crowell said the only option his sister-in-law may follow is to appeal the board's decision in court.

Sewer Commission vacancy

Sewer Commission members and selectmen will meet next week to discuss appointment of a third member to the commission.

Although neither selectmen nor the commission have received any requests for appointment, the two remaining commissioners have a preferred candidate.

At their meeting this week, commissioners Charles DeSantis and Ted Guild said they favor the appointment of Gordon Hislop. Saying his background in the execution of contract administration would be an asset to the board, both agreed to recommend him to selectmen.

With the anticipation of years of sewer contracts and administration regarding the Ward Engineering plan, the commission members felt Hislop's experience would provide them with a unique and necessary tool.

Large lots recommended

The sewer commission this week agreed with a July recommendation issued by former Health Agent Elaine Eliopolous that lots with poor soil permeability be increased in size for future housing development.

The health agent stated that zoning bylaws should be altered to include a provision providing larger square foot requirements for house lots in areas of town known to have poor soil.

The larger lots will ensure that future development in town will not complicate the chronic septic system failures currently ailing Cohasset, she stated.

SEMASS contract reviewed

Assistant Town Counsel John Slater will review contracts provided by SEMASS, the proposed regional waste-to-energy disposal company.

Selectmen requested that the legal contracts be investigated, despite a new report by engineer Fred DeFeo that the landfill has a continued lifespan of 14 years. Selectman Clifford Mitman said the landfill, which had previously been declared as having seven to nine years left, can always be used as a backup to the SEMASS plan in an emergency. The best course is to investigate all options and select the best for Cohasset, he added.

Meanwhile, the Board of Health will be solicited for its comments regarding the proposed participation in the SEMASS plan.

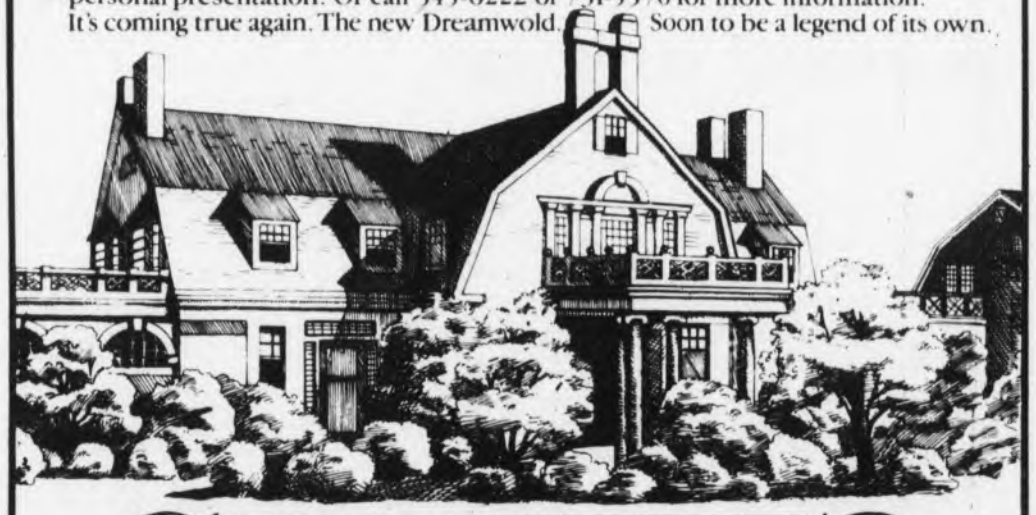
Once upon a time, not so far away,

a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.

There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.



Now it's coming true again.

All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.

Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.

This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

It's coming true again. The new Dreamwold. Soon to be a legend of its own.

What to do about teen drinking alcohol, he said. "Different situations call for different actions," Chief Kealey noted, adding that if an 18 or 19 year-old is caught drinking one beer, the officer will often just advise the youth to discard the drink and go home. The officer will attempt to contact the parents of a younger youth, to advise them of the situation. There is no "hard and fast rule" that each officer applies to every situation, Chief Kealey added.

Selectman John DeBassio, former Cohasset Police Chief, said he is in favor of adding extra part time officers to the force during the summertime. Saying the police department is always shorthanded during the summer, DeBassio said the chief should include that personnel request in next year's budget.

Chief Kealey, who said he was shot down in similar budget attempts this year by the advisory committee, agreed the suggestion "will definitely be a big help in the problem areas." The part time officers would not be hired under Civil Service and if they did not perform properly, the chief could take them off the force without delay.

Holly Lane resident Richard Conley, a member of the school committee, said school Health Education Coordinator Michael Gill does a great job educating students about the evils of drinking. But it's the public condonement of alcohol consumption that continually wears upon a youth's conscience, he said.

"It's the attitude we have to develop," he told selectmen. "And we have to work at what other things there are for kids to do in this town. We are closing our eyes - all of us - as long as the drinking is done in those three areas (Government Island, Whitney Woods and Sandy Beach)."

Throughout the discussion, everyone, town officials and residents alike, agreed the basic responsibility lies with the parents. As one observer noted, if a teenager comes home drunk and the parents are unaware of what the youth has been doing all night, "it's their problem" and not the town's.

DeBassio added, "we have a very active recreation department. But I don't know if anyone could think of enough programs to deter all kids from drinking."

Several residents, including the Conleys and the Barron Salvadors implored town officials to open and light the town recreational facilities, such as the tennis courts and ballfields, for use by the kids at night.

The former police chief said it will take a combined effort from the town,parents and kids, to address this problem which afflicts all communities. This year a program could be developed, utilizing people from all these groups, and the use of the town facilities could be incorporated into the solution.

Selectmen agreed a group should be formulated this fall to begin working on the problem and how to solve it.

different kinds of questions: What are society's obligations to its young people? Where do they begin and where do they end?

"If it's booze they're concerned with, they should take an honest stand against it instead of just shining their flashlights in a couple of windows. If it's noise or vandalism or whatever, and they feel they have to empty the beach, they should at least give us some kind of alternative. As it stands now, they just let us drink then make us drive."

This feeling, expressed by one member of Cohasset's class of 1984, is a common one. For those few hours between dusk and closing, the beach represents to many every bit of potential Cohasset social life. The teenagers need a place for themselves outside the classrooms and they feel they deserve it.

One ex-lifeguard who had seen the problem grow steadily worse throughout his own high school years, paused to comment tongue-in-cheek: "As someone who picked broken glass off the parking lot more than once, I think they should close it at noon."

He then continued on a more serious note: "The real damage to beach property, like the Bath House,

It costs a lot to dispose of hazardous wastes

The town has spent $3000 in the last three weeks to have barrels containing waste oil transported and disposed.

The hazardous wastes were located in two different areas. Eight barrels containing various engine oils and chemicals were found leaking behind the Elm Street fire station. Two 2000 gallon underground storage tanks adjacent to the Highway Dept. garage were dismantled and transported away from town last week. The tanks, which were located in the area where the town intends to construct a salt storage shed, contained waste engine oil.

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza sought competitive prices for the disposal of the hazardous wastes in both instances. And each time the lowest price, $1500, was from Zecco Inc, of Northboro, Mass. The firm specializes in the transportation and disposal of chemical and hazardous wastes. Other companies offered prices as high as $2300 to take the 2000 gallon tanks away, Lanza said.

Lanza said it cost the town $550 to have the tanks removed, and $1100 to have the contents emptied. He noted that the town was aware of the storage tanks but there was no immediate need to dispose of them until the Highway Dept. needed the area for the new salt shed.

A spokesman for Zecco Inc. of Northboro agreed the costs for transporting and disposing of the hazardous wastes is "astronomical." The reason for the exorbitant prices, he said, is because of the extremely high insurance costs imposed by the state on the special disposal companies.

One truck, he said, must be insured at a total cost of $100,000. The costs must be passed onto the consumer, he added.

The state and federal government also requires all company drivers to attend several training schools and seminars each year. The least expensive course the drivers attend cost the company $800 per driver, the spokesman said.

"It's a very expensive proposition," he added. The costs for transporting the Cohasset hazardous wastes were added into the total bill. The barrels were taken to EWR Co. in Waterbury, Conn. which incinerates contaminated oil. If the material is not contaminated, the Connecticut company puts it through a centrifuge and it is processed into heating oil. The Zecco company must pay that company to dispose of the materials.

The state and federal government closely monitor the disposal companies, the Zecco Co. spokesman said. The costs are so great for each specialized company, they are then passed onto the consumer.

He added that because stringent state and federal requirements apply to hazardous waste dumping, companies such as Zecco are in peak demand. Licensing by the government is a complicated and costly procedure, but the end result is profitable for the individual companies, he said.

Everyone now has the 'Right to Know'

Residents and employees will soon have access to information about hazardous or toxic materials under the state's new "Right to Know" law, which takes effect Sept. 26.

The legislation requires public and private employers to provide information to employees on the toxicity of materials used on the jobsite.

It also makes cities and towns particularly responsible to appoint a "municipal coordinator" to respond to citizens' requests for information about substances used at industrial facilities in the community. That aspect of the law will not take effect for six months.

Under Section 18, residents with reason to believe there is toxic or hazardous material being used in the community may file a petition with the municipal coordinator for an investigation of the substance. The resident must state the grounds for his or her belief, and the coordinator has 15 days to determine the need for an investigation.

The law specifies hundreds of substances listed on 20 pages of the regulations drawn up by the state Departments of Environmental Quality Engineering, Public Health and Labor and Industries.

The state is also providing training seminars for public officials now and in the fall.

Towns are also responsible to comply with the law as employers. Each town must appoint as municipal coordinator a fire chief, fire commissioner, health officer or health commissioner. A selectman may be named coordinator if the town does not have any of the other officials.

Every employer, including a municipal employer, must identify each substance on the jobsite deemed hazardous to workers, maintain files, train employees and keep a training record for each employee, label all receptacles, post a notice of rights at the workplace, and identify all "essential service" employees.

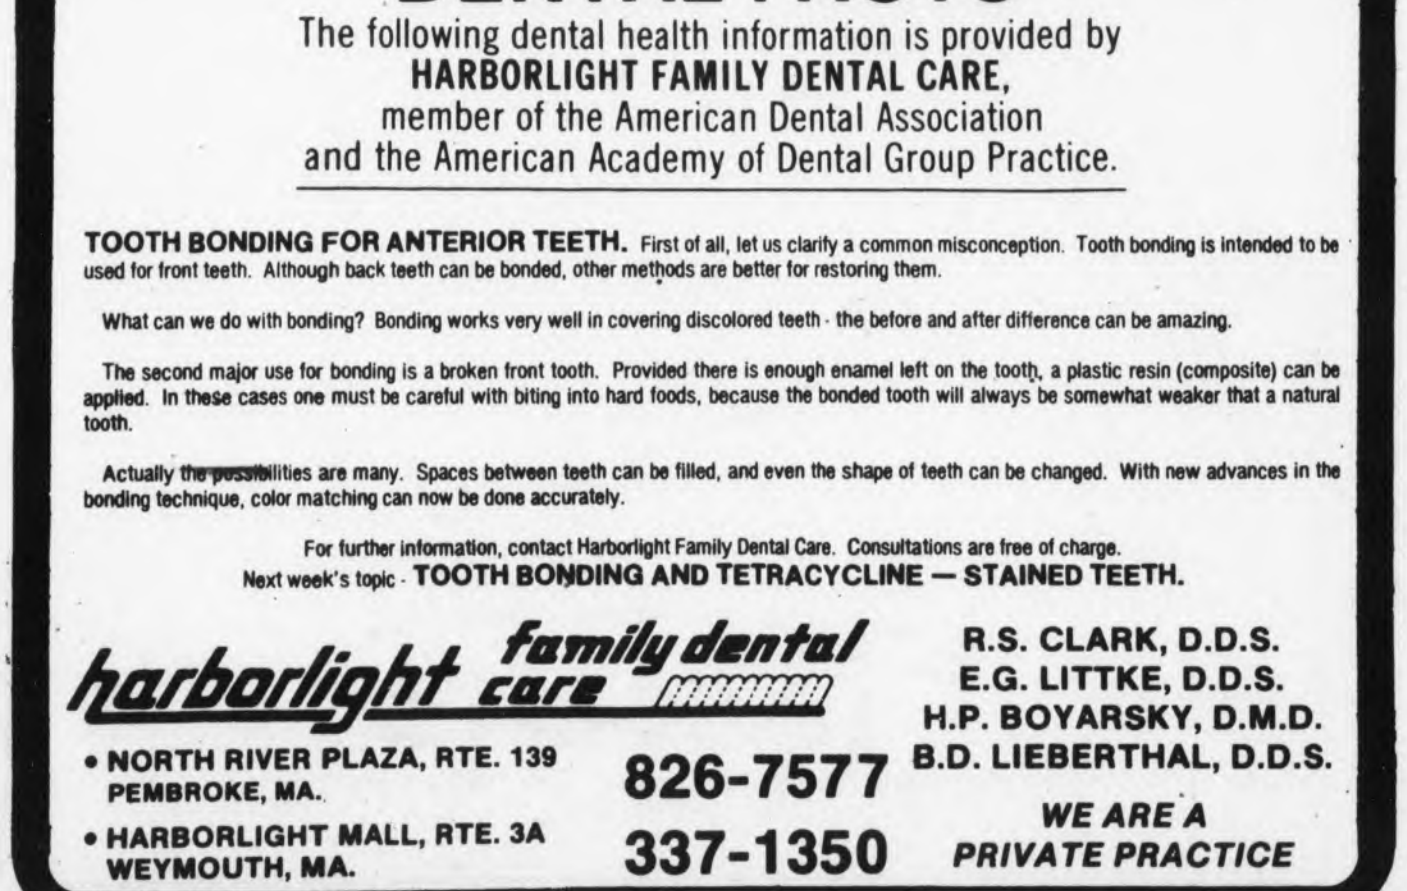
Under the law, employers have 30 days to file information on new substances with the DEQE, and six months to notify the state of any changes.

Starting April 1, 1985, the municipal coordinator is also responsible for responding to citizens' petitions for data on substances used in the community.

The coordinator has five days after receiving a petition to determine the adequacy of an investigation and to notify the employer of the request. Within 15 days the coordinator must determine if there is a need for an investigation or, if not, file a response with the DEQE. Within 25 days after receiving a petition, the coordinator must complete the investigation and report the findings to the DEQE, the petitioner and, if requested, the employer.

The state Departments of Labor & Industries and Public Health are mandated to help employees, investigate complaints, investigate reported violations, oversee enforcement, and review trade secret applications, research lab exemptions, manufacturers' listing appeals and physicians' confidential statements filed under the law.

Employers must maintain a Material Safety Data Sheet (MSDS) on each relevant substance, and records must be kept in a separate file for at least five years. The MSDS must list the chemical name; common names; hazards or risks including potential for fire, explosion, corrosivity and reactivity; acute and chronic health effects or risks from exposure, including medical conditions that may be aggravated; potential routes and symptoms; proper precautions; emergency procedures, and lay descriptions of potential health hazards.



Under the law, the municipal coordinator can release the information only under certain circumstances with notification to the employer.

Because of Prop. 2½, the state must reimburse each town for all costs incurred by a state mandate, including expenses under the Right to Know law.

The Department of Revenue, Division of Local Services, has drafted procedures for communities to be reimbursed for costs under the law, but some state officials admit that there may not be enough funds to cover all expenses.

The teens' view of what to do' doesn't start till at least twelve. I think they have to close the beach but I think it should be at midnight."

A quick survey of high school-aged kids at the beach reveals, more than anything else, a real sense of confusion at police procedure. They are bewildered by the inconsistency of closing times, frustrated by the lack of options offered them by the town.

"Even the beach gets so boring," one high school senior said, "you just hang around waiting for them to come and close it."

At least once this year, the police closed down the beach, then provoked by littering, blocked the exit and refused to allow anyone to leave until the lot was cleaned. The kids, however didn't seem worried: they didn't want to leave anyway.

While there is certainly no lack of resentment and hard feelings surrounding the issue, what is missing is communication. Until some kind of mutual arrangement is made, the young people of this town can only be expected to react bitterly. After Whitney Woods is cleared and the cars are scattered, the beer, and all the problems that go with it, is sent in a thousand different directions.

Perhaps more than anything else, the town needs to re-express its sympathetic concerns for the young. Similarly, the teens must be ready to accept some change and some good advice. Tensions must be eased, compromises made. Until then, there will just be more bad feelings and blue lights.

As one youth noted, there are still some kids who think this is just an ego trip for the cops, that it gives them something to do after the Donut Tree closes. But most of us know it's just their job and they don't enjoy doing it. Most of us know it would be a lot easier on them if they could just tuck us all in bed."

Police seeking leads in break-ins

Police have beefed up patrols around the schools and other public buildings after vandals ransacked two schools, and set fire to the basement of the Cohasset Community Center.

Police Chief Joseph Kealey also issued a plea to residents with any information about the incidents, to contact the police. There are currently no leads in the investigation of the weekend incidents which police believe are related. State police have been gathering items for fingerprints and will be continuing their assistance with the case.

The greatest damage was caused during a blaze ignited Saturday night in the cellar of the community center. Although the flames and smoke were doused quickly by firefighters, Chief Martin Dooley sustained an injury. He is currently out on sick leave with a dislocated hip which occurred when he slipped on some stairs at the center. He is under a physician's care and has not returned to duty.

None of the tenants in the second floor of the center were injured during the basement fire. There are three apartments situated on the second floor of the North Main Street building. One of the tenants had notified the president of the center Saturday night when she heard noises in the basement. When Janice Batts and her husband Mark arrived at the center and opened the door to the cellar, smoke billowed out from a fire set atop a wood desk.

A small fire was set in an ashtray at the Deer Hill School the following day and the fire alarm was set off. Minimal damage was sustained at the school. Another small fire occurred at the school earlier last week. School officials later found vandals had entered the high school sometime Monday and threw food from the cafeteria onto the floor.

School Supt. Eugene Crowell said the damage will cost less than $50 to repair. The custodial staff will handle the repairs, he said.

Meanwhile, police will be patroling the school areas more frequently, and they have been requested by school officials to pick up anyone found loitering around the buildings.

Crowell added that vandalism this time of year is not an unusual occurrence in any community. Both he and Chief Kealey concurred the real danger is when fire is involved with the vandalism.

Although two teenagers were questioned this weekend by police, no arrests have been in the incidents which are believed to be connected. Anyone with any information regarding the break-ins and fires is asked to contact police.

The wealth and variety of sights, within a day or half-day car trip from Lisbon, are perhaps greater than from any other European city. Travel to Portugal's leading city makes possible many excursions into the country's varied landscapes and rich history. For instance, Sesimbra is an authentic fishing village in the process of becoming a tourist colony. Only 19 miles south of Lisbon, it offers a long stretch of sandy shore where fisherman gather their lines after the day's catch. It is a place to windsurf, sunbathe, swim and stroll. Then, dine at the restaurants along the bay which serve a great variety of seafood including the local specialty, swordfish. After dinner, stroll the Rua da Esperance as a pleasant way to encounter Portuguese families and local fishermen.

Pleas by firefighters to no avail - EMT group formed

Despite emotional pleas by firefighters, selectmen voted last week to form a five-member Emergency Medical Service Advisory Committee.

The committee, comprised of at least one registered physician and four additional medical/health professionals, will assist the fire department in improving and upgrading the Emergency Medical Technician ambulance service.

Firefighters and EMT's have opposed the suggestion since it was recommended by the civilian Ambulance Study Committee in its final report last year. Some EMT's have said they would quit before another committee was formed to investigate their service.

Last week selectmen reiterated their oft-quoted statements that this advisory committee would not be looking into the daily operation and management of the fire department, and would not report directly to selectmen.

Rather, they decided, the committee members would work directly with the Fire Chief and the EMT's to provide methods for improving the town's ambulance service.

Firefighters have continually opposed the suggestion, noting the state regulates all areas of the EMT service. Firefighter William Protulis told selectmen last week, "if you want to enhance the service, it's a simple process. The state regulates the service. Tell the state what training you want, and they'll tell you exactly what courses, curriculum, and costs are involved."

Fire Chief Martin Dooley, who all along has stood beside the firefighters in opposition to the advisory committee, softened his opinion last week. After carefully reviewing the proposed committee charter, he recommended only a small number of minor changes.

Although he recommends he and the EMT instructor-coordinator be allowed to vote with the committee, selectmen disagreed. They did favor the suggestion that the committee include five members, two or more than the originally-recommended number.

Firefighter Richard Conley prefaced his opposition by stating, "I know what I have to say will have no bearing, but I can't believe a new program is in place with the resentment - that you're trying to jam it down their throats."

Conley said the committee's formation is a repeated example of "who cares?" about the fire department.

"You have four or five EMT's up for recertification this year and there's strong talk (by the EMT's) about not being recertified. There is the constant frustration, the attitude that we can't get our ideas across - 'do as you're told, go sit down in the corner and be quiet'. There are eight people - the EMT advisory committee and selectmen - who want this group and I don't think that's a fair representation of the town," he said.

Another firefighter who is a Cohasset EMT said he is thinking about allowing his certification to lapse. He also said he receives less than $1000 to be an EMT, a rate, he said, the town is unwilling to raise.

"If the town needs that money so bad, I'm willing to let my EMT expire and give the $900 back to the town," he said.

"If that's the only reason you're an EMT, then I think you should give it back to the town," selectman John DeBassio answered.

Firefighters Conley and Protulis shouted back, "that's totally uncalled for," to which Protulis added, "John, walk a mile in our shoes. None of you (selectmen) have come down (to the fire station) and seen this department. Solve some of the problems (within the fire department) before you go on to other things."

Conley added that the town officials have refused to listen to "our frustrations. You haven't seen a token of it."

Throughout the emotional exchange, Chief Dooley sat quietly observing, although two weeks ago he issued a letter of reprimand to Capt. Conley after he spoke out at a recent selectmen's meeting on the same subject.

Selectmen chairman Clifford Mitman challenged the firefighters' allegation saying town officials do care about settling the problems within the fire department.

"That is the only reason for this committee," he said "because we do care. It's hard to believe there isn't anything that couldn't be improved. I think its important we get some advice."

Selectmen approved the formation of the committee by a 4-0 vote. Selectman Rocco Laugelle was absent from the meeting.

Commission confident of sewer funding

The sewer commission remains optimistic that the alternative wastewater facilities plan will be fully funded despite the rejection issued two weeks ago by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE).

An appeal of the state agency's decision is being drafted by attorneys for the sewer commission. The formal appeal form will be forwarded to the Boston office of the EPA regional headquarters this week, according to commission chairman Charles DeSantis.

The two commission members, DeSantis and Ted Guild, admittedly are unfamiliar with the excessive amount of bureaucracy confronting the town's efforts for an alternative wastewater disposal plan.

But both commissioners agree the redraft "is excellent" - along with the town's chances of securing the $7 million needed to design and construct the Ward Engineering-recommended plan.

"I have to stress our optimism," DeSantis repeated at Monday night's meeting. "We have got the overwhelming vote of numerous town meetings, the law' and common sense on our side. We even have the DEQE regulations on our side."

In reference to a previous statement comparing Cohasset to "The Mouse That Roared," DeSantis added, "we shall continue to roar." Guild suffixed the remark with, "stay tuned."

DeSantis began by stating that since the town received notification of the state's rejection of the design and construction grant application, the commission members have talked at length about the future course of action.

"We as a sewer commission are determined that Cohasset will get the funding for the facilities plan that the town has labored to develop. We think, if the law means anything at all, Cohasset simply can't be denied," he added. The commission members noted that Ward Engineering and their legal firm, are as certain as they that funding will be approved for the entire project.

"We are more determined than ever to ensure that the plan is fully funded," DeSantis said, adding that he is angered "at state agencies there to serve the interest of the communities in the Commonwealth. All of us expect service and assistance from bureaucracy to accomplish the objectives of the town.

"I am alarmed at the reaction we've received (from the state) during the past year and a half. It's very unfortunate, but I am sure that law will prevail and Cohasset will have all aspects of its facilities plan fully funded as allowed in the construction grant regulations," he continued.

Both commissioners said they remain convinced "more than ever that we are going to have the bureaucracy serve us like it should."

DeSantis called "the inconsistency of the state in their reply to us, mindboggling." The commission expects the redraft to be completed and sent to the EPA by the end of this week.

In the meantime, the state Office of Community Development forwarded notification of their review and approval of Cohasset's design and construction grant application.

The state agency, which serves as a clearinghouse for many government departments, noted in a letter to the commission that after a review of the grant application, "we concur with your application for federal funding."

DeSantis stated that the town also needs approval from the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act and the Metropolitan Area Planning Council. Notification from the two agencies is expected within the month.

Candidates corner

Golden on education

William Golden, candidate for State Senate from the Norfolk/Plymouth District, told supporters at a coffee held this week at the Sedgewick Drive home of John and Polly Pyne that the state level of government holds out the only real hope for area towns to maintain quality education.

"Proposition 2 1/2 places severe limits on what local government can do, and the federal government has cut back severely on aid to education," Golden said.

"This means that the state must make public education a top priority," Golden said.

"I feel it would be terribly dangerous to neglect educational excellence," the candidate added.

"The Commonwealth of Massachusetts does not possess vast natural resources. We don't have minerals. We don't export great quantities of agricultural produce. We don't have large manufacturing plants. But we do have brain power.

"Massachusetts is, truly, a state of mind. In the early days of our nation our capital city was dubbed 'The Athens of America,' and over the years we have enjoyed an international reputation for an unparalleled educational network.

"Massachusetts brainpower has been nourished in our public school systems."

"My family cherishes the story that has passed from one generation to the next that Hiram Oakman of North Marshfield, my mother's great, great grandfather, wrote to his wife from Shenendoah where he was serving as an officer in the Union Army, urging her to set aside a tithe for the town's public school.

"As your state senator I will show the same concern for public education that my ancestor did. The sons and daughters of Massachusetts will have to compete with people from other states when they go out into the business world, and I feel it is tremendously important that we do not put our children at a disadvantage in the marketplace.

"More important, it is only through consistently superior public education that the middle class base is broadened and an educated electorate develops.

"I also feel," he added, "that while we must compete aggressively for every federal and state education dollar, it is equally important that we maintain local control of our schools. Our own towns know best the needs of their students, and are better able to decide how to spend educational funds.

"We will work together to maintain an enlightened, educated electorate, capable of passing on to their children the state of mind and the quality of life that we enjoy today."

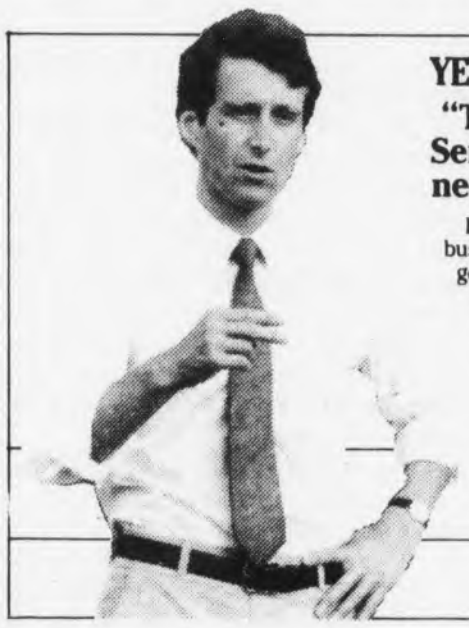
Doherty testifies

Anna Doherty recently testified before regional members of the Republican National Platform Committee at a public hearing held at the Massachusetts State House. She was invited to testify by House Representative Leader William G. Robinson and former Representative Dee Cochrane. Doherty is the Republican candidate in the Norfolk/Plymouth District seeking the State Senate seat being vacated by Alan McKinnon.

Doherty focused her testimony on the needs of women working both in and outside the home. She urged support of federal efforts to collect child support from absent parents, to increase IRA limits for non-working spouses, and to allow tax credits for child and family member care in the home.



Doherty concluded by asking the committee "to build a platform which makes this party the party of working Americans — male and female. Pay equity and incentives for programs to develop more places to care for our children should be part of that platform."

☐ And in the equestrian department, there comes a report of 4-H riding camp, held in Spenser, Mass. A dozen riders, along with their horses, have joined youths from all over the state for this camp where they take part in intensive riding activities and end the week with a horse show. The girls who attended are: Jennifer Ellintwood, Jean Garvey, Jill Hamilton, Lisa Harris, Karen Marks, Laura McKenna, Erin Powell, Hillary Proodian, Heather Ripley, Cindy Spooner, Jennifer Powers and Tanya Stein. Perhaps they will fill us in with results of the horse show upon their return.

☐ Lastly, under the sports Around Town, is news of the Men's Softball League. August 5 marked a triple-header to end the season, with the Flashers coming out on top. In the first game the Gators bombed the Blackrockers 15-6 with Bob Gledhill pitching a complete game. In the second game the Flashers beat the under-manned Gang That Can't Shoot Straight, with Bob Ciciotte (manager too) pitching and everyone hitting. George Wetzel played an outstanding game for the Gang. That win set up the final game of the season, the Flashers vs. the Gators. Bob Ciciotte again was on the mound, against the hardest hitting team in the league. The Flashers championship may be summed up by Manager Ciciotte who said, "Flasher pride and defense, coupled with timely hitting, once again brought the league championship back to the Flashers." Ken Ekberg had the best comment of all when he said "It's a long time from August to June. And this past season will be discussed many times over the winter months, but the results will never change as the Flashers are the Champs."

☐ Dianna and Bob Johnston of Linden Drive have a new little Johnston to keep Sidney company. As they promised Sidney, baby brother Alexander arrived last week during all of the heat. The heat didn't bother the Johnstons, they have been positively beaming since Alexander's arrival.

☐ Lillian Lincoln has been a busy gal lately, entertaining family and being entertained can be such fun! Her daughters, Martha DeVincentis (from Franklinville, New Jersey) and Beth Arkell (from Vineland, New Jersey) are here visiting Lawrence Lincoln. They also went to see relatives in New Hampshire while in "the area". When all of the Lincoln clan gets together it sounds as though its a house full of fun and laughter. Hope all have a good visit!

☐ Congratulations to Norbert and Susan Reardon on the birth of their son Dennis. Dennis was born last week, and joins his sister Emily to make a lovely family of Reardons.

☐ Be sure to mark the calendar for your teen . . . August 24 there will be a dance at the Town Hall with Jay Fiori as the disc jockey. Admission is $3 and the dance will be held from 8 to 11. It is being put on by the Community Center, who is hoping that all of the teens will get together before the beginning of the new school year for a night of dancing . . . and, Jay really knows how to make the music, so don't miss him.

☐ That's the news for this week. Please make the effort to call with your tidbit, it makes this column fun for all to read.

on Spindrift Lane, a short walk from the ocean and the posh mansions of Jerusalem Road in Cohasset, Wilson summed up his long-ago frustration, quoting the epitaph of famous portrait painter John Singer Sargent, "There's something wrong with the nose."

Wilson worked from a photograph to paint the Kennedy portrait, which he greatly prefers over painting a live model.

"The days of people posing for a portrait are long gone," he said. "All modern portrait painters use photos. I like to paint from several because I like to see the subject from different angles."

Oftentimes, Wilson said he will put a painting away for a while so that he can evaluate it objectively at a later date.

"When you paint a picture you work very hard, which distorts your perspective," he explained. "Every time you put your brush on the canvas you are solving a problem."

Looking back now on his 27-year-old portrait of Joe Kennedy, Wilson has finally decided he did a good job.

Wilson and his wife, Isabelle, were invited to the dedication of the Kennedy dormitory at the Cardinal Cushing School. His wife vividly remembered meeting then-U.S. Senator John F. Kennedy.

"He was the most charming man I had ever met," she said. "If there had been an election held the next day, I would have voted for him without a doubt."

During his tenure as a portrait painter, Wilson built an expensive studio on his antique colonial home on Mt. Blue Street in Norwell.

"We were putting on a show for our rich clients," he said, conspiratorially.

Unfortunately, Wilson did a lot of portraits on speculation, hoping those so immortalized would then purchase them. Most of them didn't, however, and Robert Wilson and his wife, Isabelle, remember fondly the day they finally shredded all of the unsold portraits with a pair of pinking shears and sent the remains to the Norwell dump.

"People were so shocked," said Isabelle Wilson, laughing. "How could you do it, they asked. You have no idea how easy it was."

Since his days as a portrait painter, Wilson has worked steadily as a free lance commercial artist and a professional photo-refinisher.

"People have no conception of how long it takes to paint a portrait, so in 1960 I saw the light," said Wilson. "I realized that the camera would take over the artist's job. The illustrator would disappear. If a company wanted a picture of a product, they would just take a photograph of it.

"And almost every one of those photos was going to have something wrong with it, so I took up photo refinishing. Since then my career has gone straight up."

Robert Wilson proudly stands next to his 1957 portrait of Joseph Kennedy, now hanging at the Cardinal Cushing School in Hanover. (Rose Cundari)

Robert Wilson claims this profession is one of the few ways in the art world to make good money.

"There's no money in being an artist, unless you're Andy Wyeth or Picasso. They're super-artists," maintained Wilson. "But there are an awful lot of very fine artists who are just slaving away. There are also an awful lot of mediocre photographers who are making good money."

In 1969, Robert Wilson went on his own and opened his own photo-refinishing studio on Huntington Ave. in Boston. Today, his son, Paul, also an artist/photographer, runs the business.

"He's the best in Boston," claimed his proud father. "His only competition would be in New York."

Wilson said the secret to success in the field of photorefinishing is restraint.

"You must be completely anonymous. No one should be able to detect your work. You never sign anything," he declared. "That's the big difference between an artist who wears a beret and signs everything."

Robert Wilson is an artist, but he is definitely not a beret-wearing type.

Teen drinking

The widespread problem of teenagers drinking and gathering along public property is not a situation specific to Cohasset.

The warm weather and teenagers hanging out at night have been a tradition in every community for generations. Drinking has long been associated with the nocturnal pastime.

Police and town officials are in a quandry as to how to solve the problem. Vandalism to public property by large numbers of youths who gather together, is an occurrence spawned by the problem.

In past years, every community experienced teenagers hanging around the corner stores, car radios blaring rock and roll, kids with slicked back hair chain smoking cigarettes. The scenario has altered little in the next generation.

Still the kids complain about the lack of organized activities within the town. "There's nothing to do," they protest every year. So they remain, hanging around their cars with their friends, talking, smoking and sometimes drinking.

Neighbors complain, police are frustrated at what course of action to follow.

But one thing will remain the same, no matter the generation. As Police Chief Joseph Kealey stated this week, the ultimate responsibility for these kids rests on the shoulders of their parents.

The police, the town and concerned neighbors can fret and ponder the situation for many more years. But nothing will ever be solved, no solutions will be forthcoming without the cooperation of the parents.

Because this is a problem not unique to one community, perhaps a regional solution could be devised. Other towns in the area have attempted to deal with the situation, either in a temporary or futile effort.

Perhaps if school, town and police officials from several towns get together to discuss the problem, a solution will be forthcoming.

Or perhaps the line our parents gave us each time we complained about "nothing to do" bears repeating.

"Too bad. Stay home and do nothing here."

NEWS ITEM—Cohasset: Summer programs flourish as Recreation Department may face Town Hall squeeze. In a family story hour sponsored by Paul Pratt Library, an 'organic' story teller gathers children to a story nook to hear familiar fables in which they can choose all new endings.

" . . . Mind if we stick around 'til the end of the Goldilocks story to see how it comes out . . . ?"

A houseful of pets, and a Dragon too

By Claire McDonough

"It wasn't too bad when the children started having pets," the Dragon mused, "but when the pets started having children . . . ."

I nodded. Over the years we have played host, sometimes willingly, sometimes reluctantly, to an amazing array of animals. And most of them were astoundingly fertile.

Oh sure, we had dogs and cats. Doesn't everyone?

But we didn't stop there.

"Remember Gallagher, the baby robin the kids found?" the Dragon asked.

I shuddered. I had called the Audubon Society to ask what we should feed him, and they told me that, strictly speaking, I should chew the earthworms first. They said "masticate" instead of "chew," but I didn't find the idea any less gross.

The nice lady also questioned my fitness to be a surrogate robin mother.

"Will you be able to teach him how to avoid his natural enemies," she asked, "or how to choose a mate?"

Actually, I had never given the latter any thought. I guess I had assumed that some day Gallagher would come home with the lady of his choice and introduce her all around.

We'd buy them a toaster, wish them luck, and that would be it except for holiday visits and presents for the grandchildren.

Despite my decision to mash rather than masticate (and even that was revolting), Gallagher survived to be released into the wild. I don't know how he made out with his natural enemies, but if he evaded them, there's probably a couple of robins somewhere out there who desperately need marriage counseling.

Then there was Henrietta.

Henrietta was a large, white, feathered creature who wandered into our house one afternoon. While the kids were debating whether it was a hen or a rooster, the creature laid an egg on the kitchen floor, putting an end to debate.

I called the police department and asked, hopefully, if they had received any missing hen reports.

The friendly policeman didn't exactly tell me to call back when I was sober, but he did make a suggestion that involved plucking and boiling.

Since we have always operated under the belief that if you name it you can't eat it, and since the visitor had already been dubbed Henrietta, we scratched that suggestion and set to work figuring out how to cohabit with a hen.

Once Henrietta was comfortably ensconced in a makeshift hen house, people started giving us poultry. It's amazing how many people have feathered things they don't want.

A parish priest was worried about an elderly parishioner who could no longer care for his ducks. Could we possibly . . . .

Someone who was moving had been worried sick about what she could do with her Rhode Island Reds, but since we had chickens anyway . . . .

"I drew the line at the rooster that moved in, though, didn't I?" said the Dragon.

"Right," I recalled. "When he started crowing at 4 a.m. you said either he went or you'd go. I couldn't find anyone to take you, but a very nice farmer in Norwell took the rooster."

"We had guinea hens, too, didn't we?" he asked.

I nodded. "And a blind golden eyed sea duck named Oedipus, and some very prolific rabbits, and hamsters, and a gerbil that lived in Mary Claire's closet for three weeks before we knew it was there, and a strange Siamese cat that wandered in and had six kittens, and parakeets, and ducklings, and baby oppossums, and a guinea pig, and . . . ."

"Stop," he moaned.

"Right now we have three dogs, four cats, and a guinea pig. That's enough, isn't it?"

I smiled. "Almost enough. But I think I'll keep the Dragon, too."

Republicans mislead Crampton

To the Editor:

Republicans haven't done any favor to Congressional Candidate Crampton by setting him up to support the Ward-DeSantis sewer plan. How can Mr. Crampton be against government intrusion and yet be for a plan whose centerpiece is delusions of large government funding for innovative collectors located on private property? The state repeatedly has said it will not fund these "innovative - alternatives,"which are technically and operationally undesirable. Who wants to be connected to a sewer through a system that's subject to plugging? If not on sewers, who wants the pumped mound solution — four feet of sand on top of your front or back yard? Why should Mr. Crampton favor the Hull connection, which would have inadequate flow to serve the sewered area, whereas the M&E plan would have adequate capacity — and the ability to expand later if the town chooses — when the cost to Cohasset is only $½ million more, spread over 20 to 30 years?

Supporting the DeSantis plan may seem like the popular way to jump at the moment, but the relevations that are surfacing may be fully exposed come voting day. Republicans should decide which has the highest priority — enhancing Mr. Crampton's credibility and electability, or peddling the sewer plan they happen to be emotionally committed to. Cohasset may be foolish enough to have the issues exposed in court, in which case it would have been wiser for Mr. Crampton to have avoided egg on the face by being silent on the matter.

Cable studio prepares for locally-produced programs

Describing it as an "historic event" that took two years to produce, the Cohasset Cable Advisory Committee met this week in the new cable community studio.

Located on Stagecoach Way, the studio is one of the largest facilities American Cablesystems has constructed in the South Shore. As Community Coordinator John Ronan explained to the advisory members, Cohasset is now ready to broadcast a full spectrum of local community productions. Sports, arts festivals, music videos and local political meetings are just a sample of the programs now seen on cable channel 3.

Cohasset will soon be joining other area communities contracted with American Cablesystems of Massachusetts, in the South Shore Regional Network. Towns which will include Cohasset, Hull, Norwell, Scituate, and later Hingham and Hanover, will be part of the local programming association.

Each community cable system will contribute local programs to be broadcast regionally every Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday from 5 to 10 p.m. Saturday night hours will be from 5 to 11 p.m. and Sunday programs will air from 5 to 9 p.m. The entire Thursday night schedule and Wednesdays from 7 to 11 p.m. will be Cohasset programming only, Ronan explained.

The regional solution, he said, will provide surrounding towns with a wider variety of programs which have some viewer interest in all communities. The Wednesday and Thursday night schedule will be strictly Cohasset-produced.

Currently, Ronan explained, there are plans for 24 different shows to be produced by the regional team. Cohasset will be producing Cable Update, a show in which American Cablesystems personnel will advise viewers on the latest programming and marketing developments; Art Focus, an in depth look at the local art scene; and Regional Requests, a show in which viewers will call in individual music video requests to be aired on Channel 3.

According to coordinator Ronan, the Cohasset studio has been offering a series of workshops for residents interested in participating in local programming. One hundred and fifty people have graduated from the workshops, which includes high school students and teachers, and people from various community agencies.

Ronan said the current local programming schedule revolves around a crew of about 20 to 25 community volunteers. There are also five local interns who are at the studio, editing and producing programs on a daily basis.

The next workshop will begin next Monday and Wednesday night, August 22,23, and will conclude the following week, August 27 and 29. There will be other workshops scheduled on a monthly basis, Ronan said. regional cable network this fall will feature a Monday sports game of the week. The Cohasset High School football game Sept 15 against Hanover is the first scheduled local Monday night game. There will be two other September dates.

There will be a total of 16 Cohasset sports games televised on the local channel, Ronan said, including soccer, field hockey and football. It will be the goal of the local channel to televise as many women's sports as men's, Ronan noted.

Among the local events recently taped for Channel 3 include last weekend's Triathalon, the Youth Concert is scheduled, and breakdancing is being taped in the Stagecoach Way studio. Storytelling at the Paul Pratt Library is scheduled for regular taping, he added.

Among the highlights scheduled for Cohasset cablesystems is a Sept. 16 Open House for all residents at the local studio. The event will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. that date.

At the next scheduled meeting of the cable advisory committee, school cable coordinator John Packard will update members on the progress of a high school studio. Ronan said the studio should be completed before the start of school in September.

Candidates square off in debate

The two Democratic candidates for the Norfolk and Plymouth State Senate seat met last Wednesday before cable TV cameras in Scituate in a sparring match that showed some of their differences in both philosophy and style. The debate was sponsored by American Cablesystems and the League of Women Voters.

Richard Walsh, a Weymouth selectman, and William Golden, former City Solicitor for Quincy, answered a variety of questions from a four-man panel that ranged from their idea of how the South Shore should be represented to what endorsements they have received.

Walsh, in his 2.5-minute statement at the opening of the show taped in Scituate Cable's studio Wednesday afternoon, held up a Weymouth street listing and announced that Golden's name is not listed as a resident. He said Golden had been picked to come into the district and run for the seat of retiring Sen. Allan McKinnon (D-Weymouth).

Golden rebutted by saying Walsh was the chosen candidate of Rep. Robert Ambler (D-Weymouth). He noted that he grew up in Cohasset and that his mother's family has lived in Marshfield for 12 generations. Golden moved early this year from Braintree to Weymouth.

Walsh said he had worked his way up through Weymouth politics as a town meeting member and park commissioner before being elected a selectman.

Golden cited his experience as an assistant district attorney in Norfolk County and as Quincy's city solicitor. It was during his term there that he initiated the Quincy suit against the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) and the state to clean up the pollution from the MDC's Nut Island sewage treatment facility.

The candidates differed notably on their perception of how they could best help the district. Golden said the area needs to have a regional identity and to represented on an aggressive basis. The state senator, he said, needs to get the towns in the district to work together for their own good and the common good. Walsh said it is important for a representative to be able to work well and cooperatively with other senators in order to get the best for his district.

Both agreed transportation from the South Shore is in poor shape. Walsh supports the Metropolitan Area Planning Council's $99 million package for a rail system, while Golden said the area needs a regional transportation policy to furnish better transportation for all, not just Boston-bound commuters.

Walsh, a Braintree teacher, said he supported House Bill 5704, which would increase state funding to 50 percent of the total. He also supports the state earmarking funds for items and programs. Golden said he supports the bill but said local communities should decide how to best use the funds.

Both said they would not accept contributions from political action committees (PACs) and both are opposed to a casino in Hull, favoring business revitalization of the town, instead.

Golden said he has the endorsement of Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt and the police, fire and teachers' unions in Weymouth, together with other unfinalized endorsements. Walsh said he had endorsements that have not yet been made public. He added that he did not seek endorsements.

The candidates will meet again in a second cable TV debate in Weymouth Sept. 10. The Democratic primary is Sept. 18. The winner of that contest will then face Republican candidate Ann Doherty of Marshfield for the seat.

Paralytic agent found in birds

By Judy Gilman

The South Shore Wildlife Medical Center in Hingham has seen almost 100 shore birds this month that appear to be afflicted by a food-borne paralysis.

"We're still not sure what the diagnosis is," Dr. Vaughan Pratt, director of the clinic, said Monday. "We won't have any lab results until Saturday."

What is certain is that local birds, gulls, sandpipers and red knots, are suffering from some paralytic agent. Their legs are unable to support them ("They flop around on their hocks") and they cannot flap their wings.

At the moment Pratt has 52 avian specimens in his clinic that are being looked after. "We had 30 red knots brought in from a colony on Third Cliff in Scituate," Pratt said. "They're all still alive. Twenty are on their feet, while 10 are not."

Some sandpipers brought in have fared less well, with 10 succumbing to the mysterious ailment.

What Pratt would like to know is whether the birds are being affected by paralytic shellfish poisoning, commonly known as red tide. Much of the South Shore beach area was closed to shellfishing last month when the red tide struck, as the toxin makes the shellfish toxic to humans.

"You often see this sort of situation (paralysis from a food-borne toxin) with gulls," Pratt said, since gulls are notorious garbarge eaters and there are many bacterial

Congratulations to Cohasset's Freshman Girls' Basketball team for their undisputed first place finish in the Marshfield Summer Basketball League. Overall, the girls played outstandingly, and many members improved tremendously this summer.

Coach Bill Fallon and team members Maria Cahill and Maureen O'Leary were present at Martinson Junior High School for an awards ceremony during which the entire team was awarded trophies for their achievement. Good luck this winter!

EIGHTH GRADE BOYS' BASKETBALL

Tuesday, Cohasset overwhelmed a weak Duxbury team, 63-37. Chris Watters did a great job defensively, and shut down Duxbury's toughest player. Outstanding hustle by David Shumaker and good offense by both Rich Reddick and Jason Mardsac led Cohasset to victory. Both Ronny Massa and Stephen Myers turned in good efforts for Cohasset as well.

Wednesday, Cohasset began their playoffs by beating Whitman-Hanson, 50 to 43. This victory advanced Cohasset to the championship game.

The victory was the result of an overall team effort along with excellent shooting by high scorer Chris Watters. It was a tough game, but Cohasset held onto victory.

Thursday, Cohasset played an exciting game against Whitman-Hanson for the championship. The game went down to the wire; but because of Cohasset's incredible team defense, Cohasset won, 32 to 31.

In the second quarter Cohasset exploded, thanks to David Shumaker's outstanding overall play. It looked like Cohasset might break loose, but Whitman-Hanson hung tough until the end. Rich Reddick helped Cohasset win with his excellent hustle and rebounding. Overall high scorer Michael Smith also had a good game for Cohasset.

Good luck this winter!

COHASSET SWIM TEAM

Cohasset swimmers and divers traveled Friday to Scituate to race to a 321 to 238 victory over the Scituate Harbor Yacht Club. Many swimmers hit their personal best times in this meet, and divers continued to perform well for an opening lead.

In 16 and under diving, Amy Hobbs was second, and Sara Bishop was first. In 12 and under diving, Laura Smart was third, and Carrie Ripley was second. Unofficial divers, Mary Beth McNamara and Melissa Rousseau also dived beautifully and showed improvement.

In swimming events individual first place finishers were: Eric Karcher (two firsts), Cathleen Buckley (two firsts), Sara Bishop (two firsts), Jon deLima (three firsts), Andrew Firestone (two firsts), Niffy Jackson (two firsts), Craig Carter, Adam Douglas (two firsts), Emily Tague, Greg Julian (three firsts), Topher Henderson (two firsts), David Leahy, Chip Anderson, Alix Knox, Julie Bowdoin, Lisa Clinton and Tommy Long.

Individual second place finishers were: Kay Long, Ian Knox, Link Marsac, Chip Anderson, Sophie Redfield, Jimmy Long, Brooke Anderson, Jason Marsac, Colin Knox, Kate Anderson, Maureen Long, Annie Henry, Matt Buckley, Mary Beth McNamara, Johanna Horn, toxins found in local dumps. "But the others, the sandpipers and so forth, don't eat garbage. They feed on mussels."

The treatment used on the victims is similar to that used for garbage-eating gulls: the birds' system is flushed out by feeding large quantities of fluids in hopes of getting the toxins out of their bodies. Making the operation happen is the job of clinic volunteers Chris Easton and Liz Gorfinkle.

Along with the colony at Third Cliff, which a research team from the Manomet Bird Observatory, doing field work there, picked up and brought in, the clinic has been getting other bird patients in from Hull and Plymouth, "And we've had reports on the same sort of ailment along the North Shore, from Nahant on up," Pratt said.

This is the first evidence of a massive problem of this nature since the clinic opened. "We don't usually see 50 birds in a month," Pratt said. "Now it's more like 50 in a week."

While the clinic's staff works hard to save the resident victims, Pratt says the malady, unfortunate as it is, spotlights one of the medical center's functions: to increase awareness of public health problems by closely monitoring major wildlife problems. Man is, after all, only one part of the ecosystem, and a health problem that affects shore birds can have some meaning for humans as well. "Environmental studies are what we've always wanted to do," said Pratt, though much of the staff's time is taken up with foundling baby birds, injured skunks and raccoons and the like.

Pratt said the state fisheries and wildlife departments are also interested in what results his pathology studies and lab tests will show.

In the meantime, residents sighting birds that appear to have the symptoms of paralysis are urged to take the victims to the South Shore Wildlife Medical Center on Route 3A in Hingham, just over the Cohasset line and adjacent to the Hingham Animal Clinic. The center's telephone is 749-1248.

It's happening in Cohasset . . .

Second walking tour

The Cohasset Historical Society will present the second of its three summer Sunday afternoon walking tours to Cohasset's historical sites at 3 p.m. Sunday, August 26.

This guided tour will feature a walk through one of the town's ancient Burying Grounds, followed by a "mystery" bus trip through one of Cohasset's most scenic historical areas. The old Burying Ground is today's Cohasset Central Cemetery, located at the corner of North Main St. and Joy Place.

One part of the cemetery, called "the old slates," marks the resting place for Cohasset's earliest settlers, with stones dating from the early 1700s. The oldest stone is that of Margaret (Hardin) Tower, wife of Ibrook Tower, and is dated Novermber, 1705.

The early Burying Ground, typical of those found throughout New England, illustrates the attitudes toward the subject of mortality held by the first colonists as expressed through their art and verse and used to commemorate their deceased. Examples of early gravestone art and poetry can be found throughout Central Cemetery's oldest sections.

As Cohasset's population increased, so did the extent of its burying ground and numerous generations of local families are represented by stones of various types. By the 19th century, granite had replaced slate as the material used to mark burial sites and the design of burial stones tended toward the ornate.

Cohasset's Central Cemetery contains examples of three centuries of New England gravestone art, and forms a genealogical record of those families who populated the town during its formative years.

The August 26 walking tour will meet at the Central Cemetery and end there following a special bus tour through the "mystery" historical area. The bus tour being planned is different from last year's ride along old King Street. A donation of $1 is requested. For information, please call 383-6930 or 383-0773.

Nickerson Theatre raises curtain Oct. 10

By Jane Tamburri Spitz

On Oct. 10, the curtain will rise on the country's only regional professional commercial stage, the Nickerson Theatre, located in Norwell's Accord Pond Park. The 360-seat playhouse, currently in its final weeks of construction, will offer South Shore residents quality productions of popular plays.

"The response so far has been enormous," says J. Arnold Nickerson, founder and sole financer of the $1.3 million project, who added that "81 percent of the plays are sold out for the entire year with 2-1/2 months remaining before opening night."

Nickerson describes his venture as a whole new approach to stage production. "There have been two types of theatre. One is the Broadway type that rents packages, like the Colonial, Wilbur, Shubert or Wang Center, and the other is the regional non-profit theatre that by its very nature must present creative productions and introduce new writers and directors. Until now there's been nothing in-between."

Having been actively involved in amateur theatre as a young man and more recently with the Merry-Go-Round Players in Hingham, Nickerson formulated his idea for a type of theatre that would fill the gap between Broadway and non-profit productions.

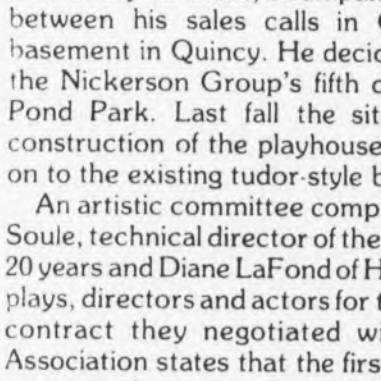
Nickerson co-founded Castle Hill Productions with the primary intent of researching the idiosyncrasies of the business. In 1980, the group rented the North River Community Club where they staged various productions employing a few Equity (professional) actors. As the group increased the number of professional actors in their casts, their audiences grew in size. "Our final production was entirely professional and the three-weekend run sold out before we opened," says Nickerson.

With the need for a regional professional theatre established and having gained the valuable experience of doing everything in the theatre from selling tickets to directing, Nickerson began working on the specifics of his project.

Nickerson already owned 3-1/2 acres in Norwell where he housed the headquarters of his 18-year-old machinery business, a company that saw its beginnings between his sales calls in Ohio and his parents' basement in Quincy. He decided to build the theatre, the Nickerson Group's fifth division, here in Accord Pond Park. Last fall the site was readied for the construction of the playhouse which would be added on to the existing tudor-style building.

An artistic committee comprised of Nickerson, Don Soule, technical director of the Loeb Drama Center for 20 years and Diane LaFond of Hingham, began selecting plays, directors and actors for the opening season. The contract they negotiated with the Equity Actors Association states that the first nine members of each cast must be union members. The theatre then has the option to hire non-Equity jobbers for any additional parts. The productions scheduled for the '84-'85 season are: "George Washington Slept Here," a George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart comedy; "The Price," a drama written by Arthur Miller; Neil Simon's "I Ought To Be In Pictures"; Agatha Christie's "Towards Zero"; a musical by Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt entitled "I Do! I Do!"; and the comedy "Life with Father", by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse.

Nickerson Theatre under construction in Accord Park.



"Each production will cost roughly $100,000," says Nickerson, a figure that falls between the estimated running costs of an average Broadway production at $300,000 to $500,000 per week and the couple of thousand dollars invested in a typical amateur production. Prospective audiences are attracted by Nickerson's low ticket prices ($12 or $15, depending on the night of the week) together with the theatre's easy access at only a few minutes from Route 3.

So far 9,000 reduced-rate subscription orders for season tickets have been received. Some 14 percent of all adults living in Norwell have purchased tickets followed by Hingham, Cohasset and Hanover, according to box office figures.

Nickerson corrects assumptions that he has finally realized a long-awaited dream in confirming that the theatre is first and foremost a business investment. He is, however, striving for artistic excellence and is confident that the theatre will provide jobs for local professional actors, a cultural resource for South Shore communities and increased business for area restaurants.

It's what's behind the windshield that counts

By Frank Pote

Most everyone who drives a car has had the experience of a cracked windshield and its replacement by a glass company.

Usually, the replacement procedure has been prompt and painless, once the glass company establishes that the client has proper comprehensive insurance.

In fact, the client drives away with his spanking new windshield and doesn't even have to worry about payment because the bill is either directed to the insurance agent or to the insurance company.

So why should there be any need to write about what has become a routine handling of a glass claim?

While the consumer, in this case the driver is not directly involved, there is a great deal going on behind the scenes which in reality is of great significance to him because it eventually affects his pocketbook.

In the past 10 to 12 years, numerous glass companies have sprung up to the extent that there may be one now conveniently located in most neighborhoods. Why has there been such a proliferation of new companies?

Well, it works this way: most glass companies offer anywhere from 20 percent to 40 percent off the established glass manufacturer's prices. And even with such a discount, the glass companies continue to make money, which they should. But not content with a modest profit, little gimmicks have been creeping into the glass replacement business.

To lure more referrals to them, glass companies have been offering gift merchandise certificates of $5 and $10 to agents who refer customers needing a windshield replaced.

On occasion, glass companies have conducted monthly pools and offer a chance for each referral which becomes a part of the monthly drawing for a trip to Bermuda, dinner for two at a nice restaurant or orchestra seats for a popular musical.

To customers who come to them for a glass replacement, glass companies also furnish goodies. Often it is a $25 gift certificate or a fill-up of their gasoline tank. Yellow-pages advertising lures clients with such offers.

The next logical question might be: "What has any of this to do with me?" Well, someone has to pay for these special offerings. Initially insurance companies which foot the bill for a glass claim are being charged anywhere from $30 to $80 more than would be normal—to cover for the special offers.

Since glass claims in the overall scheme of things are peanuts compared to the millions of dollars insurance companies pay out for all other types of auto insurance claims, they routinely pay the glass company bills—often without even checking them.

Statistics show that the extra charges add up to a whopping $6 million dollars—or the equivalent of $2 on each driver's policy in the Bay State! Yes, the driver in the final analysis is paying the freight in higher comprehensive insurance premiums.

In addition to the many glass companies offering 20 percent to 40 percent off published glass prices, there is one major company that regularly allows 50 percent off—but never resorts to gimmickry or special offers or drawings or gift certificates. That company operates a branch in town so by patronizing the local branch a customer needing a windshield replaced can do so the most advantageous way for everyone.

Individual third place finishers were: Tim Getto, Alix Knox, Toni Cann, Matt Buckley, Annie Henry, Gehrt Lubitz, Brooke Sheerin, Sarah Corbett, Susie Camardo, Brooke Anderson, Peter Buckley, Amanda Douglas, Carrie Ripley, Brendan Kinchla, Stacy Pierce, Robbie Jackson and Heather Doherty.

This would be a good time to congratulate two swimmers, Adam and Amanda Douglas, for their great performance all season. Both have worked hard and shown great improvement. Adam has become a very consistent scorer for Cohasset. Adam and Amanda will be missed as they move to Australia this week! Best of luck to you both, and Keep Swimming!

This week marks the end of a great season as Cohasset meets the Hanover Swimming Tennis Club for their final league competition Friday. Saturday morning is the South Shore League Championship Meet in Duxbury. Wish a swimmer luck if you see one! You'll recognize them by their new team T-shirts, which were co-designed by Eric Karcher and Ellen Schramm.

The swim team awards night will be held Saturday, August 18, at 5 p.m. at the Cohasset Swim Center.

from the kitchen

By Joan Pinkham

Comes the deluge! Fast approaching is that time of year when winter's anemic, bland fruits known as tomatoes give way to sun-warmed, succulent taste treats. It's a crop that tends to get out of control, with successful gardeners trying to unload their rich lodes of tomatoes on every chance acquaintance. After they themselves eat, preserve, study and admire their crop, none must be allowed to just rot on the vine and so, neighbors, relatives and fellow workers are begged to share the bounty. Mary DeCoste is way ahead of the game thinking of ways to use her green tomatoes and called the other day to ask for Ginny Whitmore's recipe which she has lost since it was first printed in here in 1974. While searching for that, I found Ruth Russell's recipe for Vegetarian Mincemeat which calls for green tomatoes (and brandy or rum, too) and Margaret Lucas' Green Tomato Chutney. Please call if you would like either, meanwhile here is how to make

GREEN TOMATOE PIE

Pastry for double crust pie
5 med., or 3½ c. sliced green tomatoes
3/4 c. washed seedless raisins
1½ tsp. lemon rind
2 T lemon juice
1 T cider vinegar
1½ c. sugar
1/2 tsp. salt
3 T flour
1/2 tsp. cinnamon
1/8 tsp. ginger
1 T white bread crumbs

Wash and cut tomatoes into quarters and slice very thin. Put into bowl. Stir in raisins, lemon rind, juice, vinegar and salt. Mix sugar with flour and spices. Sprinkle bread crumbs on bottom of crust. Mix sugar and flour mixture into tomatoes. Pour into crust and dot with butter. Lay on top crust and bake for 50 min. or longer in 350° oven.

And the bluefish are coming! News which doesn't always excite some fishermen's wives because of the fish's strong taste. Joanne Lawrence says her family really likes this easy recipe for chowder, for it has no strong flavor and is especially good when refrigerated for 24 hours. Here is a good way to use the day's catch for

BLUE FISH CHOWDER

In a large saucepan, saute onion in salt pork. Together with two blue fish fillets, add two pints of light cream and 1/2 pint of cooking sherry. Simmer for one hour on low heat. Add salt, pepper and one pint of milk, together with potatoes that have been cooked separately. Best after having been refrigerated for 24 hours.

Keep your recipes coming! Whenever mention is made of this column I' m quick to ask that the reader join in the fun of sharing a favorite recipe. I was really surprised the other day when a reader said she loves to cook. This is usually my cue to reply, "Do send in your favorite recipe, for this is what the column is all about. "But," said she, "I never have any original ones." Just in case new readers or our summer visitors thought recipes must be original, I again repeat that if it's a favorite of your family, a dish that they've enjoyed down through the years, or you've just discovered, it has passed the supreme test, so do share it with us. Like a good joke, it's hard to know where a recipe originated, but we all like to swap ideas and requests, too. Sometimes, it's hard to believe a succulent dish can be easy to prepare, but many a good cook like Joanne can easily whip up a meal in no time at all, with a recipe as simple as this one for

SCALLOPS

Put in a pyrex baking dish, or baking sheet covered with foil,
2 lb. of scallops
Sprinkle with garlic powder and Progresso Italian crumbs
Drizzle with melted butter and sherry, if desired
Broil until golden brown.

This amount would serve four amply.

Bluefish—Blues have been like ghosts in the night this past week, as the schools are moving all over Cape Cod Bay from Provincetown to Scituate. If you can find the fish you will fill the cooler as they are feeding heavy on all types of bait fish. Trolling umbrella rigs and jigging bucktails will produce on deep feeding fish, and large top water plugs are working well on schools of top feeding blues.

Striped Bass—They're around and in good numbers. Beach and boat fishing with live eels, and topwater swim plugs, have been producing bass in the 15 to 30 lb. range in Scituate, Plymouth, Duxbury, and Boston Harbors.

Flounder—Boston to Plymouth, flounder is still better than average and good fishing with seaworms can be found in most bays and harbor channels. Plymouth and Boston have been best.

Cod—Offshore six to eight miles out, and in 60 to 80' of water. 9 oz. to 14 oz. jigs are the best bet, jigged on the bottom.

Tuna—Still everywhere and feeding heavily. Even if you don't fish for tuna, a ride out to Stellwagen Bank or Provincetown can provide you with some exciting viewing as the fish are feeding on top.

Cotto Salmon—are beginning to show up at the mouth of the North and South Rivers in Scituate. They are feeding on Sano eels, and trolling around the sand bars with small swimming plugs is the best bet.

Freshwater Fishermen's Report

Bass—Largemouth Bass are active in all ponds and lakes in the area at night, and early morning will produce more fish, but midday will often bring a lunker surprise as the big fish will feed on a frog or sunfish during daylight hours on cloudy days. Use a swimming lure or rubber frog along weed and lily pad formations.

Trout—are slow in most lakes and will be until mid-September, when water temperatures bring them back to regular feeding schedules.

The Bluefish Tournament will be held this weekend. This event is held in an attempt to raise money for Pembroke Lions Club.

The background stars at the Music Circus

By Jane Lane

In the summertime, there is one attraction in Cohasset that outshines all others.

The glimmer of limelight beneath the green and yellow canvas tent of the South Shore Music Circus, "where the stars come out each night," beckons visitors throughout New England. As soon as the warm weather departs from our shores, the tent is dismantled and the crowds along Sohier Street disperse. Another summer performance is ended.

But the scene beneath the colorful enclosure encompasses the activity of local people who share a love of theatre, and close friendships that have endured triumphs and trials in the unfamiliar world of entertainment.

Producer Ron Rawson has presided over this summertime production for the past 17 years. He is the first to admit that the 120 people he employs from June til September must be geared to expect anything out of the ordinary. This is the strange, but alluring world of entertainment set on a stage in the tiny seacoast town of Cohasset.

Patricia White of Scituate, is in charge of wardrobe needs, and is talent coordinator. In plain terms, she is there to see that all the stars have whatever they demand, when the demand it, and in the proper proportions. She is in love with the job she has held each summer for five years.

In White's words, the part of the job that can be the worst, is also the reason she enjoys it so much. The unanticipated is cause for anxiety for some, but White thrives on the successful conclusion of the unknown.

"Everyone who works at the Music Circus knows they may be called on to do anything at any time. That's the fun of it - we share everything here," she says. As an example, White said she was enlisted last month by comedian Joan Rivers to drive her around Cohasset and Scituate. "She said she had some spare time, so why don't we take a tour of the town," White explained. "I'm there to see that the entertainers are happy, and if that is what it takes . . ."

Now a professional costume coordinator in New York, White returns each summer to the Music Circus. It's a nice change of pace from the frenetic scene of New York, she admitted, and it gives her a chance to relax with her family in the South Shore.

White cares about details. If it's a certain type of food or beer that a star requires, White's responsibility is to provide it. Meanwhile, the Scituate native is busy unloading trunks of wardrobe pieces, steaming them and packing them away at the show's conclusion.

That can be quite a task during the theatre's "book" shows such as "Woman of the Year," and the recently - concluded, "Grease." The more costume changes, the greater the demands placed upon White and assistant Helene Moriarty.

White expects this week to be filled with surprises, as she prepares for the arrival of Liberace. The singer-pianist arrives each summer in Cohasset with a valet (thankfully, White added) to care for the multiple costume changes and fur coats he displays throughout his performance.

> 'Cohasset brings a certain panache to this theatre . . .'
> --Ron Rawson

As White explained, some of the notorious fur capes in which Liberace is attired, weigh several hundred pounds. A non weightlifter, White is unable to successfully manipulate these fashions into a closet.

Another fixture around the Sohier Street tent for the past 24 years are Clark and Sally Ann Chatterton. They met during their first summer at the Music Circus and married soon after.

In fact, producer Rawson, whom Chatterton described as "part of our family," has known their daughter Kim and literally has watched her grow up each summer in Cohasset. Like Mom and Dad, Kimmy is now part of the employment force at the Music Circus.

Chatterton manages the 18 teens who work the concession stands. As the local school Athletic Director, Chatterton admitted he can be very selective about the kids he requests for summer employment at the theatre.

As time goes on, Chatterton said kids come and leave the Music Circus. Now he and his wife are supervising a second generation of kids - sons and daughters of couples who began work with them many summers ago.

"It's like a big family here," he added. "The kids come and go, but they always come back to see us during a performance. I really like the kids we've had working for us over the years. I get a big kick out of them."

Daughter Kim is now included in the group, having worked at the concession stands for nearly ten years.

Usher Don Raftery of Hingham, acknowledged the existance of a "family" atmosphere under the bigtop. Although this has been his first year at Cohasset, he is counting on a return appearance next summer. He graduated in June from Milton Academy and will be attending Dartmouth in September.

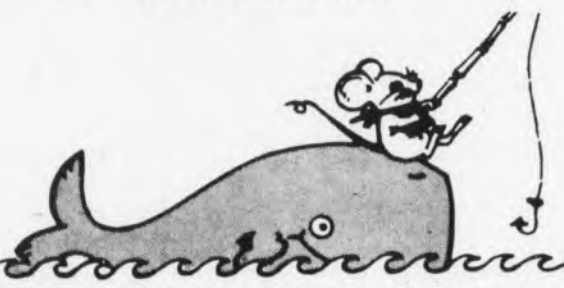
Although theatre will not be his major, Raftery said this is one summer he will never forget.

"I've liked it a lot. It's not only work, but it's fun, " he said. "I get to see the shows, and I'm dealing with people, which is what I like to do. I'd love to do it all again next year."

Directing customers to their designated seats is but one duty Raftery has assumed this summer. When Air Supply had a one-day concert last Sunday, he and other members of the crew helped unload all the lights and sound equipment, and mount them on the stage. Situating stage props in their proper place is also a function Raftery has completed this year.

"We all get along so well together. We work together and we usually go out after a show. It's been a great summer," he noted.

Rawson himself thrives on the sense of family which prevails each year in this seasonal suburban theatre. Without the pleasure it derives for the patron and for the people who compose the performance, it would not be worth his efforts.



He works year round to ensure that the Music Circus lives up to it's reputation as a good neighbor in Cohasset. Rawson quickly added that Cohasset has been a good neighbor for the theatre, and that one reason many people return each summer is to partake of the town's beauty and its fine amenities.

"We have been good for each," Rawson stated."Cohasset brings a certain panache to this theatre - the physical location, the beauty, and the ambiance of this area. It lends itself to make this an atmosphere people want to return to."

Another source of pride for Rawson is the number of local youths he employs each summer. Virtually all employees return each season, and as the producer of this summertime orchestration concluded, "they are really the ones who have stabilized this operation. Without all these local people who work and who enjoy the performances here, the South Shore Music Circus would cease to exist."

An Olympic loss at the '84 summer games

By Lois Martin

Dear Athletes of the Soviet Bloc,

I've missed you. It isn't that I've regretted the absence of snarling governments fouling the Olympics. It's you I've been wondering about.

What it must have been like for you, you men and women with skills as certain as those in the well-commanded bodies of athletes in other parts of the world. You trained, we assume, four years, as arduously as did our gold medal winners, as single-mindedly as they. Then you learned, must have somehow, that you could not put those skills to the test. We don't know what you were told since our news reports and newspapers seem vastly different from yours.

I know nothing of your country. Like you in Russia, we in America have our impressions. Ours is that you live without liberty. We find that unthinkable, intolerable. Yet we believe ourselves to have a great deal in common with your people beyond governmental differences. Namely, the pursuit of happiness. That's a reasonable goal for a person in Siberia, in the Hinterland, in the southern sector of Texas.

We have witnessed your skills in other Olympics. We have seen that athletics is one development the USSR supports. We have seen your expertise in ballet, literature, music and athletics. Unfortunately, it seems we hear about the vanquished author more than we get to see more of his work once his work offends the Russian government.

In my time as an American being even superficially aware of a Russian, it has been only Kruschev who brought the colorful leadership to your massive country. Forgive me, but a series of dour old men seem to be thrust forward to bespeak their distrust of us and to somehow represent a philosophy I've never truly understood.

I have confidence in the quality of human beings. But we, echoing distrust, have not had confidence in the intent of the Russian government. What does it want to do? Why? Is there repression of truth in your land? If so, do you see it as repression or reality, or are they the same?

Probably it would be helpful to both our nations of people to remember the opposite of love is not hate, but fear. And we have both been witness to that fear.

Without you in the Olympics some of the challenge was gone, the agony and the ecstasy in medal winning. Your Olympian participation has whet the appetite for true competition in the past.

I would not mention this to you if I did not suspect you and we share many goals. We have in the past given way to admiration of your excellence. We have ours and we've fallen freshly in love with them again in the young man who won a gold in the face of a fight with cancer, the muscled swimmers and the lean runners like Joan Benoit.

We have sat entranced by the superb use of bodies by young men and women from over the world during the last two weeks. And I, for one, missed the depth that your skill could have brought for a fuller Olympic match. The real competitor likes to test mettle against the best.

And the Olympics has been a favorite event for Americans since they first began. I'll bet your families and neighbors reacted to your victories as ours have.

My favorite quote, a classic for our countries, that I remember, probably came from the 1976 games. One of your Olympians and one of ours, female gymnasts I believe, were talking about their sport. Their immediate opposition through the familiarity of the games had dissolved into friendship.

And the Russian athlete said to the American one, something to this effect: "The same sun that warms your wheat warms mine."

'Nuff said. I just wanted you to know I thought of you and what must have been your disappointment in light of your wholehearted training and the resulting skill.

Maybe someday all powers and governments will keep the ubiquitous sun in mind when making Olympian decisions.

☐ When a woman gets what she wants, she doesn't always want what she gets. And speaking of women, Noel Coward once cynically remarked: "Some women should be struck regularly like gongs."

☐ Front page headline in the July 16 issue of the Patriot Ledger: ST. MARGARET'S TOLD TEEN SEX PROGRAM MAY VIOLATE LAW.

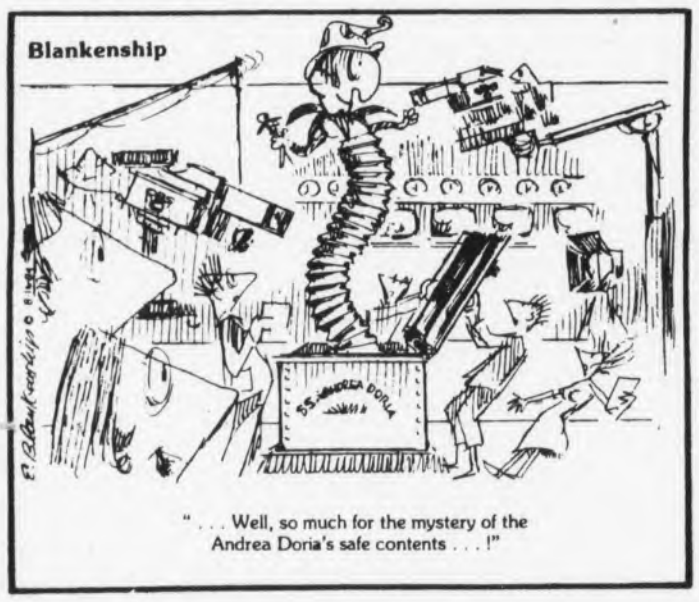
☐ God made women without a sense of humor so they could love men instead of laughing at them. By the way, most women prefer a keen sense of rumor to a keen sense of humor.

☐ Blessed are the young, for they shall inherit the national debt. Incidentally, why does a slight tax increase cost you $200 or $300 when a "substantial cut" saves you only 35¢? Moreover, unless Pres. Reagan curbs deficit spending, the government may price itself right out of the market.

☐ Josh Billings was right: "One thing that money can't buy is the wag of the dog's tail."

☐ I'm such a firm believer in silence that I could talk about it for hours.

☐ You know you're in a small town when you miss a Sunday at church and receive a get-well card.



☐ Popular music usually means that whatever is not worth saying is sung.

☐ Isn't it a shame . . . Rich relatives are either distant relatives or close relatives.

☐ A macabre headline in the Hingham Mariner: CEMETERY ANXIOUS TO EXPAND GROUNDS.

☐ Barnacled or redundant phrases we don't like: serious crisis, new initiatives, final outcome, end result, future plans, untimely death. Was there ever a timely death?

☐ A Kansas farmer was asked how things were going under the Democratic administration. "Well, the bugs got my berries, a hailstorm ruined my garden, and the drought spoiled my wheat, but I'm doing quite well, thank you, on crops the government paid me not to plant."

". . . Well, so much for the mystery of the Andrea Doria's safe contents . . . !"

Nighthawk migration watch

The Massachusetts Audubon Society is conducting a Nighthawk Migration Watch from Aug. 20 to Sept. 7, 1984. Each fall, Nighthawks migrate through New England on their way to wintering grounds in South America.

The majority of the nighthawks will pass through from Aug. 27 to Sept. 3. The purpose of the watch is to gather information about nighthawk migration.

Nighthawks are medium-sized birds about the size of robins. They are blackish-brown, have a white throat and a bold white slash near the tip of their long slender wings. Nighthawks have a characteristic flight; they bound and swoop erratically, frequently uttering their distinctive call — a nasal "peent".

The Nighthawk Migration Watch was established to answer specific questions about migration. These questions include the effects of weather on the birds' migration, and the distribution of migrant nighthawks in Massachusetts. Those interested in participating in the watch can obtain report forms and more information by calling (617) 259-9500 Ex. 7401.

'Conway Country' Update

COMPUTERS IN 'CONWAY COUNTRY'. Our nine offices in the Plymouth County Multiple Listing Service (Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury, Plymouth, Norwell, Hanover and Hanson) recently installed computers so that we can access, more quickly, MLS listings. The computers also allow members to search for listings with special qualities, review current mortgage rates, analyze prices of comparable properties and qualify customers.

BUSY MONTH OF JULY. Sales in 'Conway Country' were up 47% over July of 1983. Sales leaders in the local area were: Marie Palm, COHASSET; Ellen Evensen, MARSHFIELD; Ann Powell, SCITUATE; Joe Savoia, HANOVER; Jim Dougherty, COMMERCIAL; Ellen Saia, HINGHAM; and Helen Smith, NORWELL.

RATES CAME DOWN a little this last week. Is this a trend of things to come? A lot of economists predicted that rates would drop prior to the elections. Maybe they're right. Either way, there are a lot of people in the market and the rate going-up-or-down-a-point doesn't seem to change peoples' thoughts about buying a home.

Town seeks construction ban in watershed

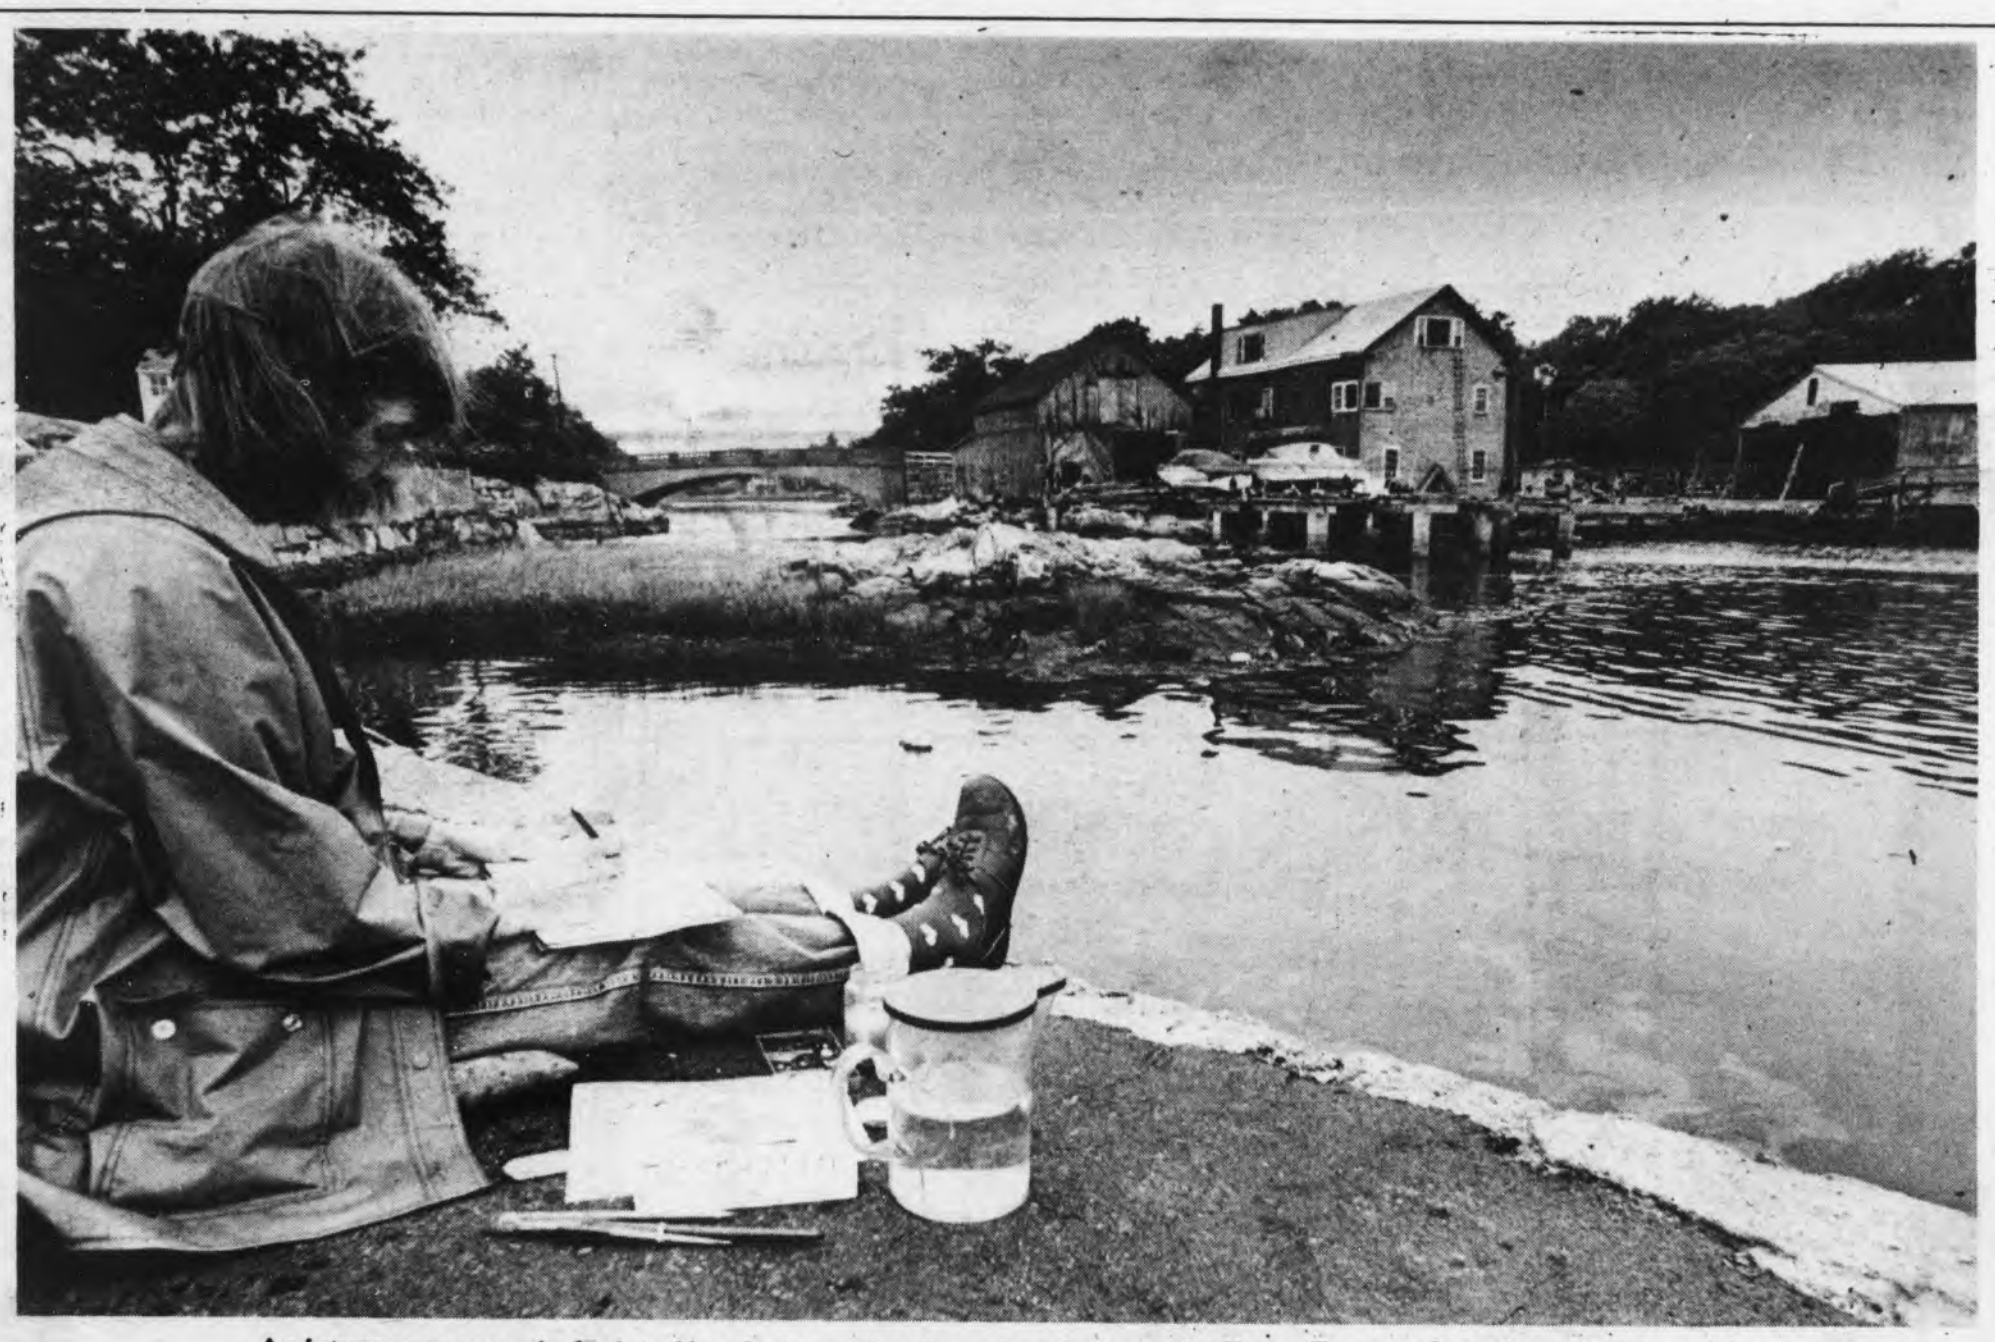
Town officials are currently researching the legality of imposing a temporary construction ban within the proposed Watershed Protection District.

In an attempt to "come to grips with a problem that should have been solved 10 or 15 years ago," the Water Commission, in conjunction with the Board of Health, has asked Assistant Town Counsel John Slater to research whether a building moratorium in the Watershed Protection District is a feasible, if temporary solution to avoid further contamination of the town's water supply.

Although town officials stressed this is not an attempt to halt one particular project, there is a developer interested in several acres of land on King Street, behind the Water Dept. office adjacent to Lily Pond.

As defined by unofficial perameters, Aaron River reservoir and its tributaries including Lily Pond, will be included in the Watershed Protection District as official portions of the town's water supply.

At the special town meeting in June, voters approved a $20,000 appropriation for an engineering firm to complete an intense study of the watershed district. The study is necessary to prepare a legally defensible document and town bylaw, outlining in infinite detail the exact contours of the town's watershed and its tributaries and channels. The intensive study, accompanied with a legal document, is expected to take more than a year to complete.



In fact, the Water Commission is about to receive a scope of services and cost analysis of the study by two engineering firms which have bid on the project.

Concerned with a growing interest to develop vacant land which will eventually be part of the official watershed district, the Board of Health and Water Commission have enlisted the assistance of attorney Slater to determine whether a moratorium on future construction there can be imposed by the town.

Atty. Slater said he received a request several weeks ago by the Board of Health, expressing the members' concern with preservation of the watershed land. He is in the first stages of research and will have an opinion rendered soon.

In the meantime, a developer represented by a local Realtor has had the former Health Agent complete water table and soil characteristic tests on an multi-acre tract of land to the rear and west of the King Street offices of the Water Department. Current Health Agent Joseph Godzik said he accompanied Elaine Eliopolous during the tests on the land. He said the proposed developer's name was not listed on the Car dealership planned for Rte. 3A

By Jane Lane

Plans are underway to locate a Ford auto dealership on four acres of land at the corner of Sohier Street and Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

The land is currently owned by Mr. and Mrs. William Poland of Cohasset and is situated behind the Mobil gas station, facing Sohier Street. Two North Andover men plan to purchase the parcel, conditional on securing the necessary municipal permits to conduct a car dealership.

Scituate attorney Michael Sullivan has been negotiating for several months in an attempt to secure prime commercial property in Cohasset or Scituate. The land has been purchased by two North Shore brothers, Joseph and Sam Abbi-Ezzi of North Andover, subject to approval by town boards.

According to Atty. Sullivan, the land is located in a commercially-zoned district. But because of some proposed land grading and filling, a hearing before the Conservation Commission and the Planning Board is mandated.

The land will be located across the street from property proposed by Donald Stazsko of Cohasset for the development of a mini shopping mall. That proposal is in the process of being re-engineered after the

Two additions to Mariner chain

Mariner Newspaper Publisher David Cutler has purchased the Braintree Forum and Weymouth News from Publisher Joseph Downey.

The ownership becomes effective Sept. 28 at a combined office near Weymouth Landing. Cutler, whose Mariners include seven hometown weekly newspapers, will also be publisher of the News and the Forum. And it will be Louise Levin-Cutler, his wife, who will be general manager of the new papers.

Both papers will retain their names. Downey has owned the Weymouth News since 1974 and the Treasurer to retire

Gordon Flint, Cohasset's treasurer-collector for the past 33 years, will be retiring October 1.

Flint, who has not yet submitted his official notification, is expected to inform selectmen this week of his decision. A Cohasset native, Flint, who will be 61, said "I just think it's time to leave."

After 33 years at Town Hall, the treasurer-collector is second in longevity of employment for the town. The Clay Spring Road resident said although he has enjoyed his tenure in Town Hall, it was time to retire. He has no immediate plans other than to "enjoy life and travel a little."

Flint said the past 33 years have been enjoyable, and mentioned in particular his participation in beginning the computer system for the town departments. Serving under several different town boards and officials has been a fun part of the job, he added.

"I really enjoyed the job and working with the public. I just figured now that I'm turning 61, it was time to leave," he added.

Town Accountant William Signorelli, another long-time town employee, is expected to announce his retirement from the post as soon as the tax bills are prepared and mailed this fall.

Atlantic Ave. complete

Water Dept. Supt. Ben Curley wishes to thank all townspeople for their cooperation during the past 50 days of construction work along Atlantic Avenue.

All water main construction has been completed. Crews will be leaving the area this week. All that remains, he said, is the clean-up work along the Atlantic Avenue neighborhood.

The crews will be patching and cleaning the street throughout the week. And in October, all lawns, shrubs and trees that were disturbed during construction will be repaired or reseeded. By November, the construction crews will repave all sections of the road and driveway aprons that were damaged during the laying of the water pipes.

Supt. Curley said the Water Dept. is sorry for any inconvenience caused by the construction, but assured residents that water service in that area will be vastly improved because of the extensive repairs.

If any resident wishes to advise the Water Dept. about any area of Atlantic Avenue that needs to be repaired because of the construction project, please contact Supt. Curley at the King Street office.

Golf course decision

The Cohasset Conservation Commission approved the concrete weir and pumping system devised to eliminate flooding conditions on the fairway at the Cohasset Golf Club.

The approval was made with the addition of several conditions, including the prohibition of any pumping during periods when such discharge could cause flooding downstream into residences along Hingham's Hull and Rockland Streets. That recommendation was forwarded in correspondence written by the Hingham Conservation Commission.

Cohasset commission members were convinced of the soundness of the engineering plans to construct the weir and pump, but they remained concerned about the residents downstream from the seventh and eighth fairway, who have lived in an almost constant state of flooding.

One condition issued by the commission stated the golf club members can never pump the flooded fairway downstream if it could cause or aggravate flooding in the residential neighborhood.

The weir with flashboards will be constructed in a brook located within the golf course property. A portable pump will discharge up to 5000 gallons of water per minute downstream in the brook. The pump will be used only after severe flooding conditions have occurred at the course, which averages once or twice a year, members told the commission earlier this month. The pump would help lower the water table on the fairway into the drainage ditch, and would be used only several days after a storm and not during the actual flooding, they promised the commission members.

Sewer commission appointment

In a meeting of the sewer commission Saturday morning, the two commissioners decided to recommend the appointment of R.G. Vanderweil of Jerusalem Road to filled the vacancy created by the resignation of former member Joseph Gwinn.

The recommendation was scheduled to be forwarded to selectmen Wednesday for their consideration.

Although the commission originally recommended Gordon Hislop for the position, the members were informed he would be unable to accept the post due to business committments.

Commission member Ted Guild said they are very impressed with the background and experience which will be provided by the proposed new member. As president of a large contracting business in Boston, Vanderweil has many years of construction and sub contracting experience.

He is a graduate of Harvard University with a graduate degree in mechanical engineering from M.I.T. His company, which employs 150 people, subcontracted portions of the construction of Copley Plaza, Guild said.

Selectmen were expected to make a joint decision with the sewer commissioners regarding the position at their Wednesday night meeting.

Braintree Forum since 1978. They are weekly newspapers.

Cutler, now of Marshfield and originally of Duxbury, grew up in the environment of a weekly newspaper with that town's Duxbury Clipper, owned by his parents, John and Roberta Cutler.

Following graduation from Colby College in Maine and a stint with the Marines in Vietnam, David Cutler, 41, was State House Bureau Chief with the Quincy Patriot Ledger before starting his own newspapers.

In April, 1972, the Marshfield Mariner made its appearance as the flagship and the largest of the hometown weekly group. Since that time other Mariners in the South Shore area have been added to the publishing firm: Norwell, 1974; Scituate and Cohasset, 1978; Hingham, 1980; Hanover, 1981 and Pembroke, 1983.

Cutler started the Mariner with partner Michael Stearns. That association was concluded when Cutler bought out Stearns' partnership in 1979.

Louise Levin-Cutler has been with Mariner Newspapers since the spring of 1983. After attending Purdue University she worked for State Street Bank and Grossman's. She is a former president of the Marshfield-Duxbury League of Women Voters.

. . . Cohasset's week

Westwood Ho!

Executive Secretary Mark Lanza confirmed this week he has accepted a salary offer from Westwood selectmen, and will become the Westwood Executive Secretary after Labor Day.

Lanza, 27, accepted the post at a salary of $31,100. He will also have the use of a town vehicle in his new Westwood job.

Lanza was scheduled to request a release from his Cohasset contract, signed by selectmen in June. The job description and advertisement was slated for review by selectmen at their Wednesday night meeting. He was named Cohasset Executive Secretary more than a year and a half ago, replacing the town's first executive secretary, Arthur Clark.

Town Hall status

The Town Hall auditorium will remain intact, at least until a public hearing is held sometime early next month. Selectmen and members of the Town Hall Study Committee will decide the fate of the auditorium and stage following that hearing.

Whatever the final decision, town officials say additional office space is imperative and a priority. If townspeople insist that the stage and auditorium remain, perhaps an addition might be constructed in the rear of the building to contain the extra office area. An architect engineer will have to study the building and office needs before determining what construction must take place.

In the meantime, the Recreation Commission has officially notified selectmen of their opposition to converting the auditorium stage area into offices. In a letter to the board, Recreation Director Jack Worley stated, "Without the use of the Auditorium and its current capacity, our programming would be severly curtailed."

The Cohasset Dramatic Club has been assured that its full schedule can be held in the traditional setting of the Town Hall stage. The dramatic club has issued its production schedule based on that assurance. The Cohasset Dramatic Club has held its theatrical productions there for more than 60 years and its membership have been among the more vocal opponents to the plans to convert the stage and auditorium.

In a related matter, the Historic District Commission informed Jim Lagrotteria that the temporary ramp installed at Town Hall for handicapped access, should be torn down. Saying that it served its purpose well during the municipal elections and for use by residents acquiring facilities stickers, the commission requested that Lagrotteria, sponsor of the ramp construction, have the temporary structure removed.

The commission also noted in its letter, "Let us know in the future if you feel that construction of another temporary ramp would be beneficial at any time." The commission recommended the removal "in view of the Committee discusses quality of science education

The school committee approved the appointment of a high school science teacher Monday night, but not without some frank discussion regarding the decline of science education.

On the recommendation of Supt. Eugene Crowell, the committee voted 3-2 to appoint Jacquelyn Furman to the position vacated by Dr. John Mika. Dr. Mika left the Cohasset system at the completion of the previous school year to become the assistant principal in charge of curriculum and program development at Scituate High School. Crowell emphasized that of the 12 candidates who applied, Furman, a Scituate resident, was the most qualified. He described her as a "brilliant woman" with an impressive background in general science and Biology.

As proof of her intended dedication to the job, Crowell noted, Furman will be attending a Master's degree program this year, and should complete her studies in Biology and Chemistry by the end of the school year.

In his thirty years of educational experience, he has never met a more outstanding teaching professional than Dr. Mika, Crowell said, and a replacement for him became a difficult, if not impossible task.

The discussion regarding Furman's appointment arose when school committee member John Langmaid said he looked at all the applications for the position submitted to the administration, "and I was distinctly underwhelmed." Many people applying for science education positions do not have a science background, "and I couldn't vote for anyone who applied," he added.

Committee member Diana Kornet countered Langmaid's claim by saying, "you're shaking your fist at the world, because we're not getting more attractive people into science education. . . you want to make a negative statement about this person and the process because you're frustrated at science education."

Langmaid answered that in Cohasset, "we are not getting science majors to teach science. I think we ought to do better than this." Member Martha Gjesteby agreed.

Crowell explained that from the 12 applications, four were immediately eliminated because they had a background in physical education, not general science. This teacher, he noted, had an exceptional background in science, having taught for eight years in private and public schools. She also had graduate courses in nursing and health sciences. And when the applicant found that the position required teaching sections of Biology in addition to general science, she searched for a suitable Master's degree program and is currently enrolled.

Another problem confronting the selection process, the superintendent added, was that tenured teachers from other school systems are not willing to accept positions in systems such as Cohasset's, with declining enrollment. They apply for the teaching positions here because of the good reputation of the system, Crowell explained, but they are not willing to make the change to Cohasset because of the declining student enrollment.

With the extensive teaching background of this candidate, he said, and excellent references, "we had the best candidate to fit (our needs in) physical science and Biology."

Gjesteby stated that with the vacancy created by Dr. Mika's departure, the science department has become weaker. She said the system needs a stronger teaching candidate.

Member Richard Conley urged his two colleagues to adopt a more positive attitude and approve the appointment. Chairman Joseph Nedrow moved to appoint Furman to the post, and the recommendation was accepted.

School roof repair update

There was some good and some bad news Monday night regarding the progress of the school roof repairs.

Architect-consultant Frank Bagge presented the school committee with an update Monday night, describing the proposed repaired areas of the Deer Hill and high school roofs. He also noted that while the elementary school roof repairs are proceding according to schedule, there have been some changes in the high school project.

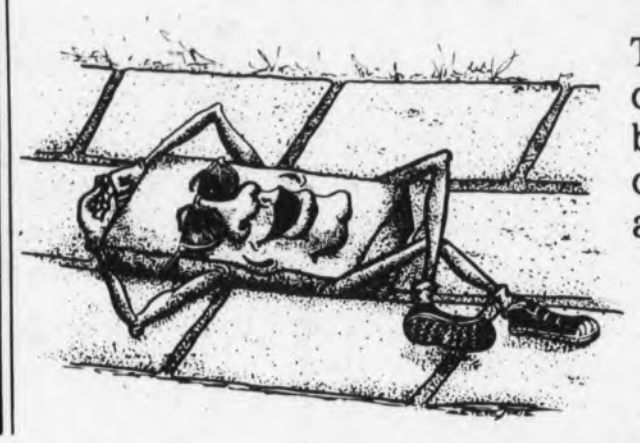
With the repairs to be completed atop the Deer Hill School, Bagge estimated about 2000 gallons of oil will be eliminated from the energy budget.

As Supt. Eugene Crowell explained to the school committee, the proceedings may seem a bit tedious and time-consuming, but that is due to the rigid and complicated regulations pertaining to major maintenance projects on public buildings. Stringent state laws require a lengthy design and bidding process, he said.

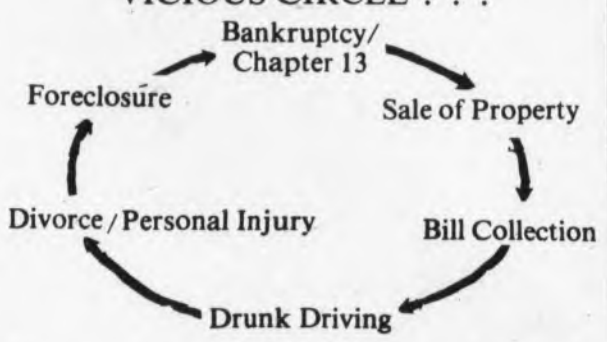
The Deer Hill repairs, which after a careful analysis have been found to be in the previously- predicted areas, will be opened for bids by Sept. 5. All work on the project.that is expected not to exceed approximately $170,000, should be completed by winter, Crowell said. The high school roof bids should be closed by October 15.

The high school repairs, however, are a more complicated matter. The west wing of the building, constructed in 1968, was previously planned for repairs in five years. But intensive study of the roof insulation and membrane have indicated an immediate need for repair, according to Bagge.

Two areas of the older sections of the roof which were planned to be replaced, can be delayed since they are not leaking. As Crowell explained, if the bids for the job exceed the amount appropriated by town meeting, the school committee may remove the alternative that is least critical.



One alternative might be to substitute repairs atop the West Wing for repairs on the administrative office wing and delay roofing those sections until another town meeting appropriates additional money.



If there is an override of the appropriations by the lowest bidder, the committee could go back to town meeting and ask for enough money to complete the entire job. Or, the committee could opt to completely

Autohaus plans relocation expansion

The Conservation Commission reviewed drainage plans Tuesday night for the relocation of The Autohaus car dealership.

The Datsun dealership is proposing a move to a two and one-half acre parcel diagonally across the street from the present location on Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Bergson's ice cream shop will be located adjacent to the proposed relocation site.

According to Autohaus owner Robert Guarino, the new site will provide the Datsun dealership with twice the space as their present Route 3A site. At this point, the owner said, it is not known if the volume of cars will increase at the new location.

The building on the site, which is being designed by the Boston architectural firm of Ahern Schopper and Associates, will be twice the size of the present Autohaus facility. "It will be quite spectacular," according to Guarino.

The hearing, during which the owner filed a notice of intent, was the first of many municipal hearings in which the plans will be reviewed. Guarino said the firm will also be making a presentation to the planning board early next month.

According to the Autohaus owner, the parcel will actually be shared by Bergson's and the car dealership. Each business will occupy two and one- half acres, and will share a right-of-way access and egress to the property not directly entering from Route 3A.

The present Autohaus location is situated on less than an acre of land.

According to the plans presented to the Conservation Commission by engineer Renwick Chapman of Loring Jacobs, there will an isolated wetlands area that will be filled and relocated for drainage purposes. The former area will be filled to provide extra space for a parking and sales area, Chapman said.

According to the engineer, the Autohaus plans incorporate the design of the drainage system to be utilized by Bergson's which was previously approved by the commission. The excess drainage will be draining to the Bergson's system which was approved last year by the commission.

Commission member Robert Mackey reminded the members that the area in which development is proposed is not defined by any town bylaws or agencies as a wetlands, but is labeled as an isolated wetland area. The same drainage area approved for Bergson's was also considered an isolated wet area, the commission members agreed.

A decision regarding the proposed drainage system for the relocation project will be filed by the commission within 21 days.

Local resident works behind Olympic scene

By Jane Lane

The international flavor of the recently-concluded 1984 summer Olympics was spiced with a hometown ingredient.

Old Pasture Road resident Arne Gjesteby, a Norwegian-native who now prefers the surroundings of Cohasset, provided a local angle to the cosmopolitan atmosphere of these global athletic contests. He wasn't one of the premier atheletes involved, but he assisted behind-the-scenes when The Games came to Cambridge.

Arne received a call last May from the Norwegian consulate in Boston, enlisting his help as an interpretor for the Norwegian soccer team scheduled to play at Harvard Stadium in July. "Sure," he responded with unemotional acceptance,"why not? It will probably be fun."

Fun, yes. And to Arne, it was exciting to see the tremendous amount of strategy involved in the preparations and execution of the Olympics. "The preparation it took to get the schedules together and the correct procedures to follow, was unbelievable," he added, still shaking his head in disbelief that the contests were played without a hitch, and players and assistants arrived and departed in a timely fashion.

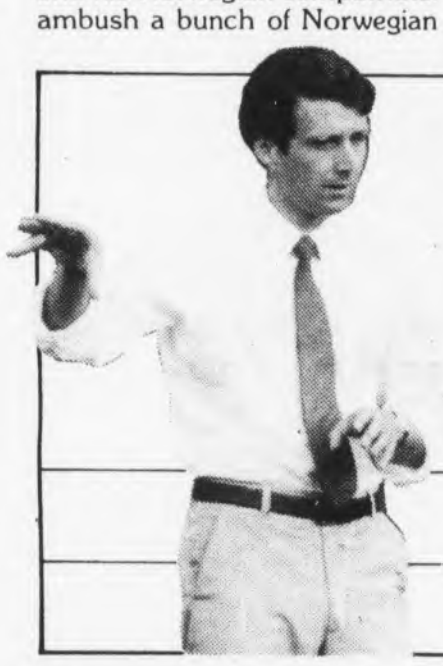
How many times have you traveled through the Callahan Tunnel escorted by motorcycles and the blare of sirens atop a speeding police motorcade? This was the process by which every Olympic soccer team traveled from the airport to their designated temporary shelter within Harvard University. It was the fastest Arne has ever seen traffic flow through that four-lane congested underwater passage.

The extreme security measures seemed silly to Arne and his Norwegian compatriots. "Who'd ever want to ambush a bunch of Norwegian athletes? I think the Olympic committee felt the security should be uniform for everyone, but I think they were more nervous about the Iraque team than a Norwegian team," Arne said.

Arne Gjesteby

Arne arrived with several interpretors, team coordinators and management people in five vans. Two police cars drove ahead of the entourage, and two in the rear. Five motorcycles provided an official-looking escort.

What amazed Arne, and had the same effect on stunned bystanders, was that the vehicles never stopped at any of the numerous intersections throughout Boston. As the athletes departed from the plane, they were literally shoved into the vans which were awaiting them on the airport runway. Sirens blasted throughout their equally speedy return to Harvard.



Throughout the week and a half stay at Harvard, Arne was required to wear a special photo identification around his neck. The two numbers emblazoned on the card immediately signified to officials where he was allowed to enter. Press conferences and team practices and games were the locations Arne spent most of the ten days in late July and early August.

The expertise provided by Arne as the team's official interpreter was utilized sparingly as many of the team players were well versed in the English language.

Nontheless, Arne enjoyed conversing with the 17 players and five team officials, and specifically preferred listening in on team strategy sessions. The native Norwegian actually found himself rooting for victory by his homeland.

His enthusiasm was short-lived however, when the Norwegian team was eliminated after three good attempts. They won one game, lost one and tied one. As Arne explained, the 16 teams who participated in Cambridge, were actually there to knock off the lower teams. The eight teams with the best record would go

THE VISA

It is necessary to obtain a visa before entering many countries. If your travels will be limited to the Caribbean Islands, Latin America and Western Europe, you probably will not ever have to concern yourself with visa matters. However, if you plan to travel off the beaten tourist track, you should know something about visas and the potential problems associated with them. The fact is that more countries require a visa to enter than do not, about 60%. The visa itself merely consists of a stamp, usually placed right in your passport. It indicates that an official of the country you wish to enter has examined your your passport, that you have met the requirements for entry, and that you have been granted permission to travel there.

Cohasset Golf Club

The Cohasset Golf Club held its Annual President's Trophy last weekend. The golfer with the highest gross was Rick Towle with a score of 141. The player with the lowest net was Ron Hobson with a score of 131.

The Golf Club also held a four-ball best two-balls tournament. The winning team consisted of Bill McLaughlin, Bill McMahon, Bruce Thomson, and Mike Londergan.

A Four-ball total-point tournament was also held at the Golf Club Sunday. The winning team was Frank Agoftino, Bob Peprie, Ken Corcoran, and Rick Towle.

Cohasset Swim Team

The Cohasset Swim Team ended a fantastic season with two very exciting meets. Friday, the team travelled to the Hanover Swim and Tennis Club for the season's last dual meet. After exchanging a three-point lead with Hanover throughout most of the competition, Cohasset eventually pulled ahead in the relay events to come out with a 293 to 270 victory.

In sixteen and under diving, MaryBeth McNamara was third, and Erin Powell was second. In twelve and under diving, Jon Delima came in second, and Madlyn MacDonald came in first.

In swimming, the first place finishers were: Niffy Jackson, Eric Karcher, Caitlin Staunton, Sara Bishop, Andrew Firestone, Becky Golden, Chip Anderson, Kelly Chase, Julie Bowdoin, Danny Camarado, Cathleen Buckley, Topher Henderson, Kate Delima, Maureen Long, Liz Buckley, and Brooke Anderson.

Second place finishers were: Jon Delima, Tim Getto, Niffy Jackson, Brooke Anderson, Ian Knox, Greg Julian, Chip Anderson, Alix Knox, Madlyn MacDonald, Matt Buckley, Julie Bowdoin, John Jackson, Andrew Firestone, Becky Golden, Maureen Long, Cindy Spooner, and Kate Anderson.

Third place finishers were: Danny Baird, Maureen Long, Toni Cann, Ian Knox, Dawn Fitzgerald, Gehrt Lubitz, Merry Hansen, Ali Welz, Joel Whitman, Liz Buckley, Jason Marsac, Nancy Riley, John Jackson, Tim Getto, Kelly Chase, Jay Staunton, Peter Buckley, Julie Bowdoin, Danny Camardo, Kate Anderson, Alison Killilea, Link Marsac, Cindy Spooner, and Tommy Long.

This meet brought the team's season record to five wins and one loss.

Saturday, the team competed in the South Shore League Championship meet with Hanover and the Duxbury Aqua-Dux. In this meet, each team was allowed to enter one swimmer (or diver or relay team) per event, and those chosen to represent Cohasset certainly swam their best ever. With many close and exciting races, Cohasset maintained a steady lead over Hanover, while trailing Duxbury by very few points. Many swimmers hit their personal best times in helping their team to a phenomenal second place finish, not far behind Aqua-Dux.

First place finishers were : Jane deLima(16 and under ☐John R. Maloney, a Dartmouth College senior from Cohasset, was selected as an undergraduate advisor for the 1984-85 academic year.

Undergraduate advisors primarily are responsible for assisting freshmen in their personal and social adjustments to life at the College. Established in 1979, the undergraduate advising program is run by Dartmouth's Office of Residential Life.

Maloney, son of John and Rose Maloney of 16 Woodland Drive, is a 1983 graduate of Cohasset High School. At Dartmouth, he has received an academic citation for his outstanding work in a freshman English writing course.

☐And the champs are — in the summer basketball league, eighth grade: Chris Walters, Mike Smith, David Schumaker, Dave Shultz, Steve Myers, Rich Redick, Ron Massa and Jay Marsac. Coaches Tim Marsac and Larry Shultz did an outstanding job and were also trophy winners!

☐Two 1984 grads are already settled into the college life. Pat Leonard and Charlie Brady are at Clemson and all reports are that they are enjoying it thoroughly. Clemson starts a lot earlier than most but is out a lot sooner. They can give other classmates some idea of what college life is all about, should they be asked.

☐Ellen DiGirolomo "retired" from the South Shore Music Circus last week, in order that she might prepare for her new college, which includes concentration on soccer. Everyone at the Circus was unhappy to see Ellen go, she has been a fixture there for a lot of years. Seems like Mother Nature agreed, when on the last night of work at her refreshment stand there was a huge skunk to greet her! The skunk was hiding in the corner, not bothering a soul and visible to most; so Ellen, being the trooper that she is, set a table up outside her stand and did "business as usual." Every company should have a worker like Ellen!

☐Had a nice chat with Ed Cox last week. Ed and his wife Lisa are parents, brand new parents of their son Ian Edward Cox who was born on August 4 at Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Congratulations to the happy family!

☐The Cohasset Swim Team had their first parting this week, and it was a sad one for the members. Two of their good swimmers, Amanda and Adam Douglas, are moving to Australia and will certainly be missed. Amanda and Adam were told to go with good luck and to be sure to keep swimming! Lastly, there were promises of lots of letters in the air, which will be fun!

☐Congratulatons to Frank England, who has been elected a vice president of Carlin Insurance, one of the largest private-owned property and casualty insurance brokerage firms in Mass. With all of the worthwhile things Frank has done for our town, both as a school committeeman and selectman, it is easy to understand why a company would want him as a part of their leadership.

☐Next week is guaranteed to be heatwave weather as both boys and girls take the field for double sessions. We've not seen a cool one yet. Best of luck to all coaches and athletes. Here's to a fine season...and, to all of the spectators, let's make an effort to support our teams. The Mariner always lists all events, times and places, so take the time to pin it up then GO! and have a good time. The kids work too hard not to be supported.

☐Liberace was spotted "Around Town" last week, in the market for antiques, as usual. The things that he loved so much were Mr. Conte's miniature furniture. He must have a super collection by now. Mr. Conte sure does outstanding work, and it must be so nice to be recognized by a "star." Anyway, heat and all, Liberace loved Cohasset!

☐All of the soccer players arrived home safely from Ireland. Be sure you ask them about their trip! They had a wonderful experience.

☐That's the news for this week. Keep it coming.

Commission appeals DEQE verdict

Sewer commissioners were disappointed, but not surprised to receive a letter from the Department of Water Pollution Control (DWPC) this week, informing the town of pending legal action.

Commissioner Ted Guild said the letter from DWPC Director Thomas McMahon contained a "clear threat" of legal action against the town after Cohasset's sewer grant application was denied by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

A lengthy appeal of the state verdict was sent this week to the regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), and the sewer commissioners are extremely confident the state decision rendered earlier this month will be overruled by the federal agency.

Guild said the correspondence from the DWPC was expected, but they are confident that the federal government will agree "the state agency has usurped powers that do not hold," and the decision to reject Cohasset's funding application will be overturned by the EPA.

A 32-page legal appeal was forwarded to the EPA this week by attorneys from the Boston firm of Goodwin, Procter and Hoar, representing the Cohasset Sewer Commission.

The appeal document states, "instead of embracing this new plan with enthusiasm and congratulating Cohasset on a job well done, DEQE and DWPC have repeatedly criticized and obstructed Cohasset's efforts and doggedly clung to a policy which is directly contrary to federal law, misapplies their own written criteria and could cost Cohasset almost $5 million. The integrity of the federal program, the credibility of its guidelines, and directives for small towns and dispersed areas, and simple fairness and common sense require that DEQE and DWPC be overruled and the relief requested above be granted."

Guild said the sewer commission is eagerly anticipating a positive reply from the federal government within a month.

Conservatory school

The Preschool at the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham will open for the fall Sept. 17 with two new faculty members. Carol Forbes Scheig, director of the program for many years, is taking a leave of absence to care for her new daughter. She is, however, in charge of the Preschool Advisory Committee and, with Conservatory Director James Simpson, helped to select the new teachers.

Maureen Connolly will direct the program this year. A graduate of Bridgewater State in early childhood education, she also trained at the New England Montessori Teacher Education Center in Boston.

For information about this program contact the Conservatory office, off 19 Fort Hill St. in Hingham.

There's summer fun

Articles in this and every other newspaper so often center on the problems in our society. There are certainly enough to go around.

It's the core of journalism to bring forth items of particular interest to the community. Events deemed "news worhty" are those occurences which by their nature are unusual or considered to be of import to a majority of the community.

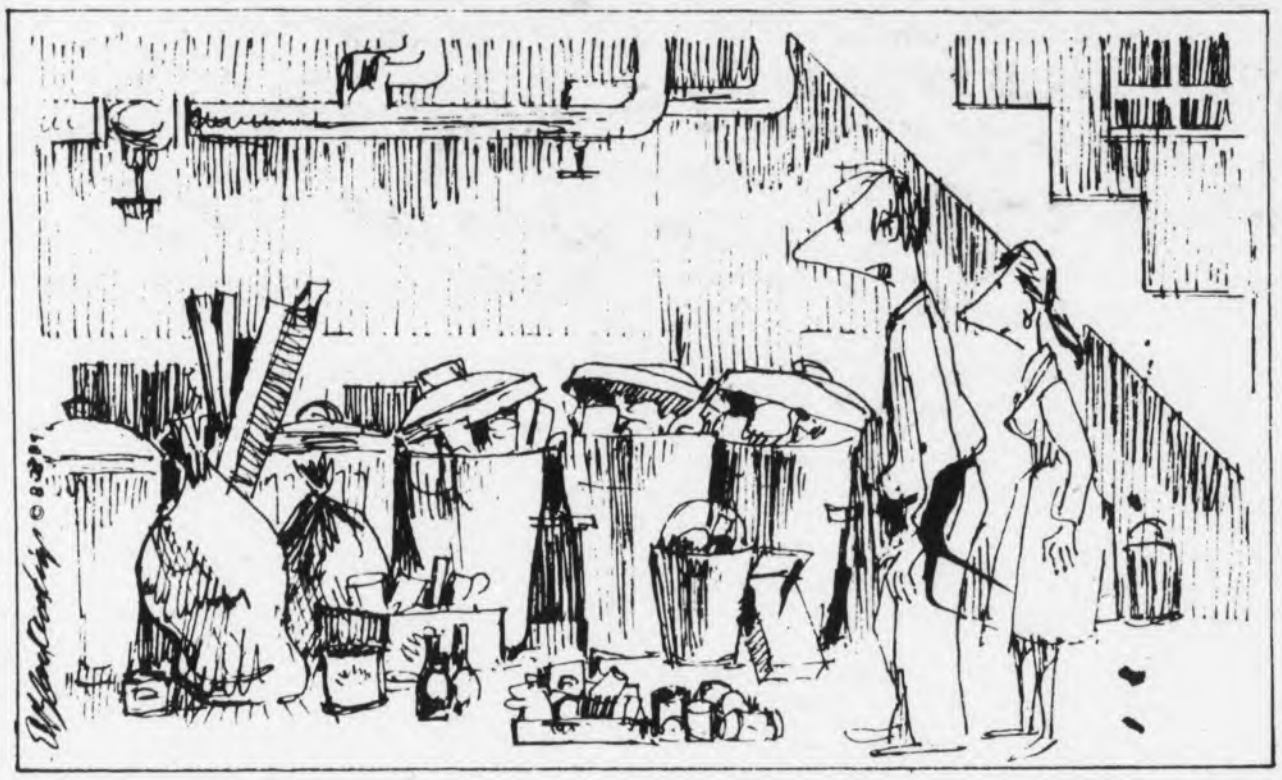
People setting fires to school buildings is an event considered to be of prime importance to the people who paid for the construction of the building, and its ensuing repairs.

Someone taking a stroll around a public building, having a picnic lunch on the lawn, or playing softball at the school ballfield may make an attractive photograph, but it is not a news event. "Who cares?" is the questioned posed.

So it seems the majority of the news presented to the public is a view of the negative, troublesome happenings within our world.

Vandalism and arson of Cohasset's buildings, a murder at the Marshfield Fair, fatalities in an accident, are unusual events about which people want to be informed. We, as a resource for these people, attempt to bring forth the facts in unbiased, concise terms.

Once in a while, it becomes depressing for the reader and the writer who are continually bombarded with instances of how cruel, petty, argumentative and abrasive the world can be.



So, it's a welcomed respite for the reader and writer to learn of some brighter sides of everyday life.

Aside from the vandalism, fires, accidents, municipal entanglements and bureaucratic foul-ups, Cohasset residents have had a summer abundant with happy events.

For instance: the flock of kids who have participated in the Swim Center's program and competitions; the dozen high school students who had an event-filled two weeks in a career internship program sponsored by the Social Service League; the Eighth Grade Boys Summer Basketball League champs; the Boys Scouts' trip to Washington D.C. followed by a two-week Scouting camp; the hundreds of kids who attended the daily recreation programs and special events scheduled throughout the summer (thanks to the infinite imagination of Recreation Director Jack Worley); the many people who helped make the historical museums such fine attractions; the children and adults whose lives are enriched by the varied classes offered at the South Shore Art Center; the many men who rushed off after dinner to play in the summer Area Civic Softball League; and special attention must be paid to all Cohasset Moms who patiently trod each day to the beach, straggling home with exhausted children onto kitchen floors gritty with surplus sand.

We hope this has been, and will continue to be, a great summer, not particularly filled with any unusual events.

NEWS ITEM — Cohasset: Further study of SEMASS trash-to-energy concept by town's dump committee authorized by selectmen. Possibility existing dump could last 5 to 7 years longer than original projection. Rochester, Mass. regional waste plant converts trash to energy sold to utilities

The grandchildren will get theirs

By Claire McDonough

Flora flung herself onto my livingroom sofa the other evening.

"Give me a coffee," she begged, "fast."

I poured a cup and pressed it into her hand. "For heaven's sake, Flora," I said, "what's wrong? You're shaking."

"You bet I'm shaking," she replied. "I've just had the most terrible experience of my life.

"Don and I went to Green Harbor to hear that man who impersonates Elvis Presley."

"I've heard he's very good," I told her.

"He's great. That was the good part of the evening. But afterward we decided to go out for pizza.

"We found a place open, but it was mobbed. For a while we just concentrated on fighting our way to the counter, but just when I was ready to decide whether or not I wanted anchovies, it hit me.

"We were the oldest living people in that room."

I patted her hand. "Was that so bad?"

"Bad?" she expostulated. "Have you any idea what it's like to know you're the only one in an entire establishment wearing polyester? That you're the only one without rainbow colored hair? That everyone else's blouse appears to have been brutally torn from one shoulder?"

I nodded sympathetically.

"Probably the same way I felt the day I asked Mary Claire what she was learning in Social Studies and she said, 'Oh, all about some creep named Hitler.'

"Or the day Jay asked me if the Indians were friendly or hostile in my neighborhood when I was a child.

"Or the day Eileen asked me if hoopskirts were a problem on escalators.

"But probably not as bad as I felt the day Tanya said to me, 'Grandma, were you the first woman?' "

Flora sighed. "The worst was when I heard the manager tell the waitress, 'Where are your manners? Take care of that older couple first.'

"Just when I started to slink out, I heard someone call me by name. I nearly died when I realized it was one of my daughter Fern's friends. It'll be all over town by tomorrow that Fern's senile old mother and father managed to totter into the pizza place. They'll probably be talking about how quaint we looked."

"What did you do?" I asked.

"What could I do? I pretended I'd never seen her before in my life and that I didn't speak English."

"Good move," I told her.

Flora held her cup out for a refill, and stared into it glumly.

"What's happened?" she asked. "I used to be part of the now, with-it group. Now I find out I'm then, and out of it."

"It's part of nature's plan," I told her. "It's all involved with the life cycle. Remember when we were young?"

"Yes," she said. "I think it was during the Truman Administration."

"Well," I said, "we used to laugh at ladies with blue hair. Now we're being paid back. Blue hair is in, especially if you spike it."

Flora looked doubtful. "Isn't there any solution?"

"Sure," I replied. "You know those grandchildren of ours? Well, someday they'll tell their parents they're studying about some creep named Khoumeini. Some day they'll be the ones in the pizza shop. Some day Fern and her friends will walk in and realize that not another person in the place is wearing eye liner. Some day one of our grandchildren will be told to "take care of the older couple first," and it'll be Fern and her husband.

"Meanwhile, be patient. And never wear your hoop skirt in an escalator."

Sewer appeal is grandstanding

Letters

To the Editor:

The Sewer Commissioners have submitted 32 pages of hogwash to EPA in another grandstanding attempt to make their funding delusions come true. Cohasset residents soon must recognize the reality that neither state nor federal government is going to subsidize work on private property, whether it is rehabilitation of septic systems or Rube Goldberg innovation to conduct sewage from home to street. What may be funded are treatment facilities and the collector systems on public property. Whether the sewage is sent to Hull or treated in our own plant doesn't alter the funding principles. Over the long run, building our own treatment plant is more cost effective than connecting to Hull for a few years of inadequate service, then building our own plant. The connection charges can, of course, be funded by a town program and should not be feared. Those never to be sewered naturally hope for the cheapest solution - but Ward isn't the cheapest in the long term, nor is doing nothing an option the town can get away with.

R.M. Campbell

This phoney story doesn't have an end

(Jeff Giles has been an invaluable, if unusual addition to the Mariner this summer. This typically strange account will be Jeff's last contribution before he leaves or college. Thanks, Jeff. Ed.)

This story's got everything. It's too big for one town. Mystery, intrigue, AT&T. Everything. It's so ugly it'll keep you up at night, so shocking it'll blow the fishing boats right out of Cohasset harbor.

This is no time for weak stomachs or bad bladders. It's time for the truth, the sinister dark-of-the-closet truth.

The Cohasset Mariner's never had a story like this. Not since Curtis Compact stopped selling Dr. Pepper. Cohasset's never had a story like this. This one's all mine and I'm going to take my time with it.

It starts downbeat in a middle class kitchen in a middle class neighborhood with the end of summer hanging in the air like rotten fruit and fish. It starts with a kid like me.

I was half ready to go to college. Half of me was in stolen milk crates in the back of a '72 Pinto already half way to Providence. The other half was falling apart at the seams.

All my friends were there: scattered like pimples on the dead lawn. They consoled me with our oldest high school jokes, asked if they could go through my closet once I was gone. My whole life was folded up like Traveler's Checks in my back pocket.

But my mother was ready for all of it. She saw the hunger and the hurt, the confusion and the despair. As I slumped off toward college with my typewriter and my electric guitar, my mother sprung into action: she cancelled the lease on my phone.

The story doesn't stop there. This story never stops; 383-9184 was pulled out of the wall, probably by some innocent fool with grubby fingernails and a rented washing machine. But the calls kept coming. And coming. One by one, from nowhere in particular, they shot up and down the wires: old friends from high school, college kids on break.

Nothing could stop the calls. The number was too easy to remember. I was too hard to forget. I imagine they came at all hours, one or two in the early morning, the rest all bunched up after five. But no one was there to answer them.

To the world outside college grounds, I was expatriated, terminated, dead and gone. My mother was swamped with sympathy cards and even tried to get a refund on by beach sticker. They held late night vigils for me and wept over my old poetry.

And all the while, my mother saved $6.35 on her phone bill every month.

Then the phone company struck. They slithered in unnoticed even as the receiver was still warm with my breath and broke all the rules: they gave away my number.

If there is anything worse than having your neighbor accidentally open your tax returns, I suppose it's knowing that somewhere, someone is answering your phone.

When I came back from school this year, there was a new phone and a new number waiting for me. 383-6498: a little complicated but not too bad. Things were looking up. Gradually, my friends came back to me; we discussed, debated, even chatted on my new line.

Even better: I could answer the phone any way I wanted, give the number out to only a select few. It was delightful privacy.

But it didn't last. Nothing does. The horror was back, in a new shape and form: people were still calling my old number. And they weren't getting received by my ringing hellos or my marvelous quips. They were stopped in their tracks by a woman who had never heard of Jeff Giles and was sick of answering midnight calls for "Honey" and "Big Guy."

She was probably just getting over the excitement of having a new phone number too.

At first, I thought of this mysterious woman as my own private secretary, ready to screen all the trivial, tedious calls. She had no idea who I was and her identity was equally clouded in obscurity. The arrangement was perfect.

Until a close friend, pressed almost to tears by the angry threats of Lady X, gave away one clue too many. My friend bit her lip when the woman said "Is this the Jeff Giles that writes for the Mariner?" She had found me out. Talent like this is hard to hide.

A few weeks ago, the new phone book came out. I got quite a chuckle out of it. Someone's got one more year of answering to do for me. Free of charge.

Sitting here at my desk just now as it approaches midnight, I thought of giving Jeff Giles a call. Just to hear a friendly voice. Just to see if I had any messages.

Flying Scot race

Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, the Cohasset Yacht Club and Cohasset's Flying Scot Fleet 105 hosted the North East District Flying Scot Championships. The twenty boat fleet consisted of nine Cohasset boats and eleven out-of-town boats which came from Duxbury, Sharon, Rockport, Harwichport, and even Riverside, Connecticut. The series consisted of five exciting races run in three days.

The overall winner of the series with a total of 13¾ points was Cohasset's Mike Ellis along with his crew, Steve Smalzel.

Ray Kasperowicz, another Cohasset skipper, came in third overall and was helped by his crew members, Bob Davenport and Tad Kasperowicz.

In second, was Mike Kiley from Massapoag Yacht Club in Sharon. In fourth was Mike Terry from Sharon, and fifth was Bob Flynn, also from Sharon.

Friday and Saturday the races were run under Northeast winds blowing about 15 knots and heavy seas. Sunday, the seas flattened out, and the southwest winds were blowing about 10 knots.

Murray's memos

Report from the State House

By Mary Jeanette Murray

What is the leading cause of untimely death in the U.S. for people ages 1 to 29? What is one of the major causes of untimely death for everyone ages 30 and older? What is something that can be easily remedied, yet most distressingly is ignored day after day?

The answer to all these questions is car accidents — deaths that could be prevented in large part by simply wearing a seatbelt. Only 13% of the U.S. population wear them.

Current Statistics

In 1983 alone, there were 43,028 highway fatalities. In other words, 5 deaths per hour, equal to the entire population of the city of Revere. It is estimated that 40% of those deaths could have been saved by wearing seatbelts. Virtually all of those who were seriously injured would have walked away without a scratch.

Current Initiatives

There has been a lot of talk about seatbelts lately. General Motors is advertising on the radio that they will pay $10,000 to anyone who is found dead with a seatbelt on. They are "that sure." Statistics show that not even one-half of 1% of all highway deaths were the result of wearing a seatbelt. If one plays the odds, they are much more in his or her favor if a seatbelt is worn.

Currently, there are 30 countries that have strict seatbelt laws including Great Britain, Sweden, Japan and Israel.

In Massachusetts, there are efforts in the works to gain support in the House for a mandatory seatbelt use law. It is expected to be taken up this Fall.

There has also been action on the federal level. Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole proposed that mandatory passive seatbelt restraints or air bags be phased in in U.S. cars beginning in 1986. Some have complained that there is a loophole in the Dole plan. If 2/3rds of the states pass mandatory seatbelt laws, the passive restraints or air bags regulation would be rescinded. Safety activists and insurance companies are outraged at this.

The Most Frequently Heard Arguments

One argument is the questioning of the enforceability of mandatory seatbelt laws. Answers have included that somewhere along the line, whether it be the state or federal government, efforts must be made to protect the safety of all who drive automobiles.

Another frequent argument is, "You can't tell me what to do in my own car." Responses have been that there are far too many people who are affected by automobile safety, or lack thereof, for it to be an individual concern. Billions of dollars are spent in the U.S. annually in high insurance premiums and health care costs because of people not wearing their seatbelts — and why should society have to pay this price?

And further, since there is a means for the prevention of these untimely deaths and debilitating injuries, we are foolish not to take advantage of them.

Secretary Dole says that passive restraints or air bags may be better than mandatory use laws but mandatory use laws are certainly better than nothing and, "It is the most prudent way to go."

These are some of the facts and thoughts I've heard.

probable delay in reaching any decision as to a permanent structure."

Search for home

The Cohasset Rotary is looking for someone to accept a Japanese student into their home this year.

The 16 year old Japanese student will be attending Cohasset High School as a part of the Rotary International Student Foreign Exchange program. In exchange, Cohasset's Lisa Cuff of South Main Street will be attending school in Japan this year.

The host family will be needed for three months during the upcoming school year. Anyone interested in serving as a host to Cohasset's Japanese visitor, please contact Ralph Harrison at 383-0100.

Duck pond problems

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission requested that Tree and Park Supt. Peter Laugelle explain why the common duck pond has turned a greenish hue. They also want to know if any future color changes are forthcoming.

Noting that, "We all feel you have been doing an outstanding job as Superintendent of the Tree and Parks Department," Commission Chairman Gordon Stevenson stated the members think the color change was too drastic. The change was due to a dye placed in the water.

The commission suggested that any future color changes be discussed with them ahead of time. And because so many residents have asked questions pertaining to the pond, "let us know in advance if you have any other plans to change the color (other than making it appear more natural)."

School committee briefs

Repair update

reroof the entire high school building, at an approximate additional cost of $230,000. That would require town meeting appropriation, in addition to the $500,000 currently appropriated.

Supt. Crowell said he would recommend that the rear of the high school,used for academic classes, be repaired prior to the administrative office section. The structure of the underside of that roof would lose all strength if repairs are ignored there, he explained.

Presently, the school committee plans no additional appropriation requests. They are simply re-prioritizing the project, chairman Joseph Nedrow stated.

Crowell also noted that in a recent conversation with John Calabro, director of the School Building Assistance Bureau, assured him that Cohasset's application for matching state funds is in order and seems acceptable for grant consideration. The state monies are available, he added, and additional forms will be completed by the town for state review.

Teaching appointments

The following teachers were appointed Monday night by the school committee: Eileen Mills, METCO Coordinator, salary $22,000: Martha Nugent, half-time Grade five teacher, salary $10,646: and extra duty positions, Paul Narkiewicz, cross country coach, $971; and Paul Blanchard, junior varsity boys' soccer, $971.

The following persons were also appointed to extra duty positions. The vote by the committe reaffirmed a previous vote made last spring: Edward Minelli, head boys' basketball, $1941; Matthew Salerno, assistant J.V. basketball, $1092; Lawrence Schultz, boys junior high basketball, $971.

Because Athletic Director Clark Chatterton had not forwarded a recommendation to the superintendent, the committee did not appoint a junior high school soccer coach. But after some discussion, the committee members agreed that three coaches would be needed for the coming season - one junior varsity girls soccer coach, one girls junior high school soccer coach, and one junior high school boys' soccer coach.

Supt. Eugene Crowell said three coaches, rather than the anticipated one coaching position, would exceed the budget appropriated for 1985. About $2000 extra will have to be requested from town meeting, he said, to meet the cost of employing the two additional coaches. It is now expected that about 75 junior high school students will be participating in the soccer program.

Arts policy

Although they differ in content, the policies drafted individually by Supt. Eugene Crowell and school committee member Martha Gjesteby regarding arts curriculum will be posted for teacher review and comment.

Gjesteby's policy draft begins with a short quote by David Rockefeller Jr. , stating art "must be included as a component of all education." The committee member, who devised the policy in conjunction with Karin Bartow, recommended that a school arts advisory committee be formed to develop a K-12 curriculum. All school personnel should be trained in the arts and in the relationship of the arts to teaching the other disciplines, she stated.

Supt. Crowell's policy suggested that an arts program be maintained within the confines of the present limited budget. The school department continues to emphasize its support of arts education as an important portion of Cohasset's educational system, he said.

The two policies will be posted for review by the teachers, with input to be gathered by the end of September.

Student-teacher ratios

The kindergarten enrollment for next year now stands at 72 students. With that amount of students, Supt. Eugene Crowell said the school system would need another half-time Grade five teacher, while providing four sections of kindergarten classes.

The class sizes are as follows: Kindergarten, 72 students; Grade one: 83 students: Grade 2: 65 students; Grade three: 86 students, for a total of 306 students at the Osgood School.

Grade four: 81 students; Grade five: 80 students; and Grade six: 80 students, for a total enrollment of 241 at the Deer Hill School .

Reading program party

A party to celebrate the conclusion of the Summer Reading Program at the Paul Pratt Library will be held Thursday, August 23 from 4 to 5 p.m. at the Unitarian Parish House.

All children who participated in the program are invited to attend and share in the games, crafts and refreshments. The party and the Summer Reading Program are sponsored by the Friends of the Cohasset Library.

Second walking tour

The Cohasset Historical Society's second historical walking tour of the town's historic sites will take place this coming Sunday afternoon, August 26, at 3 p.m.

The tour will include both old and new sections of the Cohasset Central Cemetery, one of the oldest of the town's early Burying Grounds. Society Curator David Wadsworth will lead the tour from the earliest section, called "the old slates" to newer parts of this typical New England cemetery. Early cemetery art and poetry will be observed, and the development of the cemetery through nearly three centuries will be traced.

Following the Burying Ground walk, Historical Society Vice President Osborne Ingram will lead a "mystery" bus tour through one of Cohasset's most picturesque and scenic areas, returning to the cemetery.

The walking tour will meet at 3 p.m. at the Cohasset Central Cemetery, corner of North Main St. and Joy Place. A donation of $1 is asked of those attending.

This is the second of three Historical Society walking tours of the summer; the final one will be held on Sunday, September 9, and will include the historic Town Common, the 1747 Meeting House on the Common and old Cohasset Center. All are welcome to the events. For further information, please call 383-6930.

Abstract exhibit

"How much can be eliminated from a given face or figure and have what remains contain the essence of humanity — strength, honesty and humor?"

Such a question goes through the mind of artist Ruth Bragg as she approaches the work of artist Ruth Bragg, which will be on exhibit for the September-October show at the South Shore Art Center, 103 Ripley Road. The show opens with a reception on Sunday, September 16 from 5 to 7 p.m., and runs through October 13.

For the most part her abstractions of the human figure come from the emphasis on pattern — the patterns people wear, the patterns people form when they meet with each other. A graduate of the Harvard Graduate School of Design and the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, Bragg's most recent shows include "Fathers and Children," Concord Library; "New Works on Canvas," First Parish Church, Bedford; "Stepping Stones," Boston Visual Artists Union; The Cove Gallery, Wellfleet; and Artists for Survival, Boston Psychoanalytic Association.

Her awards include Designer of the Month, Word Guild Magazine, February, 1978; honor award, Phoenix One, 1982; honor award, Mini to Maxi, 1981; and honorable mention, "Springtime in New England," 1980; and jurors' choice, "Spring Show." She has participated in five films on ceramic sculpture produced by Jack Liebb Productions.

The public is invited to view her work at the Center, Monday through Friday, noon to 4 p.m. and Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The opening of her show will follow the fall open house at the Center at which time visitors may find out about the fall semester classes, meet the instructor and register for the courses. The open house is from 4 to 6 p.m.

"DENTAL FACTS"
The following dental health information is provided by
HARBORLIGHT FAMILY DENTAL CARE,
member of the American Dental Association
and the American Academy of Dental Group Practice.

TOOTH BONDING AND TETRACYCLINE — STAINED TEETH. Permanent discoloration of teeth can be so severe as to cause embarassment to the person afflicted. The antibiotic group, tetracyclines, will produce staining of the teeth if given during the time that teeth are forming. The drugs are incorporated into the dentin layer which causes a yellow-grey appearance. The sensitive period for developing "permanent" teeth is age 3 months to 8 years. If the drug is taken by a woman in the last trimester of pregnancy, or by a newborn baby, discoloration of the "baby" teeth will also occur.

What can be done? Many people have asked, if discolored teeth can be bleached. Although, it can be done, it is very time consuming and is usually not effective. However, tooth-bonding can be done to effectively improve the appearance of discolored teeth. Two methods are used: One is the bonding of a plastic material (composite resin), while the other involves the bonding of a plastic veneer to the teeth. Costs for these procedures vary with the individual case. It should be known that bonding does have a limited life-expectancy.

For further information, contact Harborlight Family Dental Care. Consultations are free of charge.

Young People's Theatre awards scholarships

The Young People's Summer Theatre recently completed their eighth annual season of musical theatre entertainment with their production of "On the Twentieth Century."

Donald Capen, Administrator of YPST, announced at the final membership meeting of the year, 1984 was the group's most successful year to date, including the largest audience and most funds raised since the group's debut in 1977.

At the meeting three scholarships were awarded to YPST members. Susan Hermance received the Scholarship for Continuing Education and Sue MacPhetres and Kristen Mogan received Scholarships for Graduating Seniors. All three recipients are Scituate residents.

The Scholarships totalled $1,000 this year, bringing the grand total of YPST Scholarships to well over $4,000 since they were started in 1978.

Capen announced there are plans to bring about some changes in the group next summer. Some possibilities are hiring a new director or choreographer, changing the age limitations of the group, and starting a Children's Theatre which will involve children 11 years-old and under.

Possibilities for next year's major production were discussed as well. Capen says he would like to produce a more well-known show, but doesn't rule out producing an off-beat, unknown again — something YPST has become known for.

Some well-known possibilities are "Bells Are Ringing," "Carnival," "Li'l Abner" and "Wonderful Town."

Among the lesser known shows are "Mack and Mabel," "Redhead," "One Touch of Venus" and "70, Girls, 70." Capen says this list will be altered many times before announcing next year's musical in March.

Capen wishes to thank, on behalf of the entire YPST membership, all of the businesses and individuals who supported the group this summer.

Dramatic club tryouts

The Cohasset Dramatic Club, assured of another full season of community theater on Cohasset's historic town hall stage, announces tryouts for its forthcoming December production of the classic favorite "Cinderella."

Tryouts will be held at 2 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 23 at the Cohasset Town Hall.

Directing the show is Judy Holmes, eminent artistic director of Hingham's Elizabethan Companie. This production of "Cinderella," written specially for the Dramatic Club by Rushworth Kidder, is in the form of a traditional English Christmas "panto" show.

It is family entertainment which includes music, dancing, spectacle and broad comedy. Director Judy Holmes plans a cast of 25 of all ages and types; perhaps more.

Cohasset and South Shore theater enthusiasts are invited to try out for this unique show planned as another Cohasset Dramatic Club "Christmas Special." Play dates for "Cinderella" will be the second and third weekends in December. For more information about the tryouts, please call 749-0616.

Historical walking tour in Cohasset Sunday

The Cohasset Historical Society will present the second of its three summer Sunday afternoon walking tours to Cohasset's historical sites at 3 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 26.

This guided tour will feature a walk through one of the town's ancient Burying Grounds, followed by a "mystery" bus trip through one of Cohasset's most scenic historical areas.

The old Burying Ground is today's Cohasset Central Cemetery, located at the corner of North Main St. and Joy Place. One part of the cemetery, called "the old slates," marks the resting place for Cohasset's earliest settlers, with stones dating from the early 1700s. The oldest stone is that of Margaret (Hardin) Tower, wife of Ibrook Tower and is dated November 1705.

The early Burying Ground, typical of those found throughout New England, illustrates the attitudes toward the subject of mortality held by the first colonists as expressed through their art and verse and used to commemorate their deceased. Examples of early gravestone art and poetry can be found throughout Central Cemetery's oldest sections. As Cohasset's population increased, so did the extent of its burying ground and numerous generations of local families are represented by stones of various types.

The Aug. 26 walking tour will meet at the Central Cemetery and end there following a special bus tour through the "mystery" historical area. The bus tour being planned is different from last year's ride along old King Street. A donation is asked of $1. For information, please call 383-6930 or 383-0773.

Camaraderie is key at So. Shore emergency room

By Moira McCarthy

A total 53,447 sick, injured, or worried South Shore residents passed through the doors of the South Shore Hospital emergency room last year.

And, the staff is pleased to say, they received some of the best care available in the state.

South Shore's emergency room is, in official hospital language, an Associate Trauma Center, according to head doctor Martin Roche of Hingham.

A full-fledged trauma hospital, as defined by a government study, features 24-hour trauma units and the ability to treat literally everything.

The only injury that South Shore can't treat, he said, is an open-heart accident, or an injury that needs a bypass pump. "Those don't come too often. We can handle anything else. We can handle it. It's all right here. We've got doctors available on call no more than 20 minutes away. And we've got some very good units upstairs (in the hospital). It's a first-class operation up there."

Roche, a trained emergency doctor who's been on the South Shore staff since 1969, is confident with the job his emergency room staff is doing, and credits training and camaraderie to their success.

"Everyone here is either board qualified for emergency medicine, or on their way to becoming that. And we all live local. There's a camaraderie, a vested interest in the patients. That says a lot--we want to do our very best for our neighbors."

Indeed, the staff list of the emergency room reads like a list of Mariner towns: Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Pembroke, Marshfield, Hanover, Norwell. The South Shore is truly represented.

The key words to describe the work of the unit, Roche said, are "Stabilize and specialize.

"When a patient is on the way in, we are in constant contact with the EMT's treating them. If it's a major injury, a multiple injury, we work to stabilize, and then to bring in a specialist to take care of the situation. We basically are stabilizing down here, with the rest of the work going on upstairs "

There is one doctor on duty at all times at the emergency room, doubling on weekends and holidays. There's also a list of six on-call doctors who are close-by, ready to come in an emergency.

Unlike the hospitals of soap operas and days gone by, emergency room doctors are not drawn from the regular hospital roster.

"It used to be done that way, but now emergency medicine is a specialized field, and we're all specialists," Roche explained.

On an ambulance trip to South Shore, a patient can expect the experience to go like this:

The minute the EMT from the ambulance reaches you, he's in touch with the emergency room desk by radio. Your stats, condition, and injuries are described to the on-duty doctor, who advises the EMT how to treat you on the way in, and then prepares the emergency staff for your arrival. If an IV is needed, the doctor gives the okay.

When you arrive at South Shore, there are two security guards at the door, who are aware of your arrival, and clear the way for the EMTs to bring you in. Both are trained, proffesional policemen sworn in by the town of Weymouth.

If you are seriously injured, you go directly to the treatment room, or trauma room. If it's less serious, you are examined by the Triage nurse at the front desk, who decides if your injury is a priority injury, or if you can wait a few minutes to be treated.

If you are under 18 and alone, a nurse will stay with you until a family member or guardian can be reached. You won't be left alone.

Next, a doctor will see you, stabilize you, and find you a specialist. You own doctors can be called in if you prefer.

If you are a walk-in patient, your first step will be an examination by the Triage. Depending on your injury, you may have to wait a few minutes.

Lacerations, or heart attacks, are priority injuries, according to head nurse Terry Riese of Marshfield. Fractures, she said, can wait a few minutes, as can ear aches and sore throats. If it's beween 9 a.m. and 9 p.m., the ear aches and sore throats are sent down to ambulatory care.

Riese, a 32-year veteran of the South Shore emergency room, added that they don't recommend a patient call in before coming. It won't make any difference, "unless you want to see a certain doctor. We're an emergency room. We see anything, anytime, no calls needed. We treat everyone. We don't worry about what kind of insurance you have, either"

One insurance program that does require a call for an okay, she added, is HMO's.

Like Roche, Riese has great confidence in her co-workers.

"We've got some super, super paramedics working out of here, they do a lot of work in the field. And we've got great communication with them--no ambulance ever arrives here without telling us they're coming.

"The physicians here are specialists from head to toe--the same as you'd find in Boston. They're true trained emergency doctors. The nurses are too, they're all trained and tested in ACLS (Advanced cardiac life support), and are re-examined every two years. That's one great staff."

The emergency room, soon to be expanded, now contains a nine-bed medical room, which is sometimes used to hold patients overnight in the event of crowding, a 5-bed visitor treatment room, a trauma room, and a CPR room, as well as a waiting area and the main desk and lobby.

The expansion will come mostly in the increase of space in the trauma unit.

According to Roche, traumas are treated every day, sometimes more that five a day. That, he said, has a lot to do with the location, and the many towns the emergency room serves.

On an average, he said, the unit treats about 160 patients a day. But many times, he added, it's much higher than that.

The main ingredient at South Shore emergency room, Roche and Riese agreed, is true feeling for patients. Roche added, he'd stake his life on that.

"If I was driving through the South Shore and I was from the North Shore, I'd be happy to be brought here after an accident. I'm not jsut saying that--we've got a great unit here. Everyone should feel confident here."

Clarification

In an article published in last week's Mariner concerning the "Background Stars at the Music Circus,"- an employee of the Cohasset summer theatre was mistakenly identified as an assistant.

Helena Moriarty is not an assistant to Patricia White of Scituate, the South Shore Music Circus talent coordinator.

Helena is the Executive Administrator of the Music Circus, second in command to producer Ron Rawson.

As White explained this week, Helena "facilitates day-to-day operations in many ways, ranging from high-level dealings with the stars and their management to much smaller tasks, such as, together with me, planning catered meals for visiting artists."

White requested the correction "as a tribute to Helena Moriarty, Executive Administrator, friend, and right arm of the South Shore Music Circus."

Once upon a time, not so far away,
a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.
There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.
Some said he was eccentric. Others said he was vain. But in truth, the legendary millionaire, Thomas Lawson, was building a beautiful haven as a gift for his beloved family. And in 1903, Dreamwold came true.

Now it's coming true again.
All the majesty, privacy and splendor that was Dreamwold. In twenty-six unique Victorian condominium residences encircling a spectacular rose garden and beautiful swimming pool.
Dreamwold. A magnificent blend of historic restoration and new construction as only Boston's premier developer, Parencorp, could do.
This summer, Dreamwold is available at pre-marketing prices, starting in the mid-100's. Visit Dreamwold between 11:00 AM and 6:00 PM daily for a personal presentation. Or call 545-0222 or 731-5570 for more information.

American beauties and then some

By Lois Martin

It was the classic resplendent beauty pageant. Glittery stage, festooned in lights, tuxedoed host, orchestra to lend music to the parade of beautiful women.

And they were lovely (no, I'm not picking on Vanessa again). This time though, there was a difference. Stunning fantastic figured women, who happened to be married.

Mrs. America, her contest, hosted by the man with the smooching problem, Richard Dawson.

As the curtain opened on the two-hour drama preceding the naming of our new Mrs. America, the camera panned the broad-beaming audience comprised entirely, it seemed, of husbands and mothers of the contestants.

PATCHES

Mildly-muted supporters' catcalls (presumably from the men rather than from the mothers, though one can't be sure) accompanied the opening view of 50 beautiful married women parading on the stage in their pageant-issued red or blue bathing suits.

I decided to stay with the show long enough to see Mrs. Massachusetts and Mrs. Maine. I knew the southern women would have long dark hair and be gorgeous. I wanted to see representatives from what I consider to be my states, if not of mind, of residency.

The two looked a lot alike, medium length light brown hair, swell teeth, competitive figures. It appeared at the opening that Mrs. Massachusetts' nerves were shot but by the intermission she would have absolute composure.

Neither of those two was named in the drum-rolled list of the 10 semi-finalists.

By then, if not amazed, I was moderately hooked and I was determined to listen to their statements about why they should be Mrs. America.

They were every bit as attractive as the Miss A. contestants and their beauty obviously boasted staying power. Each of the 10 was introduced with information on the length of marriage and number of children.

From the outset it was clear that Mrs. California had an edge. Remarkably pretty, her jowls were firm, her blonde hair entirely unabrasive and her body . . . well, let's just say things were in proper places and proportion.

Add to that her credentials, married 28 years, the mother of five children and two grandchildren. I knew she'd be a top and tough contender.

For my part I liked Mrs. Oregon, married four years with six children . . . . don't worry about that, she was about 41, short dark hair, charming and devoid of the imperious walk that showed in the Golden Stater's gait.

As the 10 explained why they should be Mrs. America, there was a diversity of approach. No easy task, those 30 seconds in which to sell one's self without false modesty yet with enough to make one more becoming.

In their bathing suits, they leaned on a small table affair and bespoke their qualifications. Mrs. South Carolina, a blonde knock-out, said she saw the honor as a vehicle for spreading the high standards of the contest among other young women in the world.

Most of the others used that line.

Not so, two of them, who said, in essence they'd be happy to tell other women in the country how they, too, could keep their bodies in perfect condition, raise gloriously happy children, while sustaining the marriage properly and running a job and a home.

I only got nauseous once.

And it was Mrs. Oregon with her level-headed awareness that balanced the ticket. She noted the opportunity and explained how she'd meet and fulfill the challenge. She had my vote but Mrs. California still had the body and everything else with 51 years.

(If Richard Dawson had ever started hugging like he was kissing that night, those women would all have been flat chested by 9 p.m.)

As we approached the awesome selection of the five finalists we were treated to films of the women in the week prior to the contests, as they cavorted around in clothing made by sponsors of the event.

Meanwhile their husbands were beside themselves in expectant delight in brief interviews. Fortunately mothers of the contestants were not included. They were writhing in suspense.

Well it was Montana, Hawaii, Oregon, West Virginia and California who were named to be finalists. At that point I forced Terry and a friend to change their channel to watch the outcome with me.

I figured it would be either the black lovely Mrs. Montana, . . . but I didn't think anyone could get more votes than the beautifully enduring California girl. Besides her husband had made it clear she was the most magnificent woman on earth.

I still favored Oregon, knowing she couldn't make it. . . . a bit too down-to-earth, naturalness overtook her glamor by a bit much for the judges. And she was named the fourth runner up.

Next to fall from crown potential was Hawaii, though I couldn't figure how she'd lose any contest. Then Montana was second runner up.

That left West Virginia . . . and California . . . A brunette and a blonde, a 27 year old and a 51 year old, someone married three years and someone married 28.

Mrs. West Virginia was named Mrs. America, in case you weren't watching with me. Her family, a little girl and two older sons accompanied her policeman husband on the stage. Richard Dawson didn't kiss any of them.

The winner is entirely lovely, as gorgeous as any Miss America has ever been.

And California was gracious in being first runner-up. All of it was classic Americana, a dight gaudy in some places but fulfilling the promise of beautiful women.

One woman at the Mariner said her daughter asked her how come she hadn't entered the Mrs. America contest. Now that kind of comment from one's offspring has to make a winner of any mother.

Should she choose to enter, though, she ought not be surprised to be competing against Mrs. California. I tell you that woman looks like a competitor for years to come.

Musings

By John H. Cutler

☐ Chris Konagla is a vibrant, glib reporter on Channel 4 TV, but the other night, in a 2-minute sequence, he made 3 boo-boos; "a new innovation..." (is there any other kind?), "evacuate out..." (can you evacuate in?), "a sort of a..." (omit the second "a").

☐ Headlines I like:

"Teacher Strikes Idle Kids."

"Orioles Beat Rangers As Pitcher Relieves Himself."

"Major Quack Kills Two School Children in Idaho."

"Lebanese Christians Brace Selves and Stew."

☐ The largest painting ever painted was the "Panorama of the Mississippi" completed by John Banvard in 1846. It took spectators 2 hours to view all of the 12-foot high, 16,000 foot-long picture.

☐ Do you live to eat or eat to live?

☐ I never hear anything about the next to the last straw.

☐ When you try to make an impression, that's probably the impression you will make.

☐ I didn't say he was too tall. I merely said I kept looking up at him — up, up and up — until my neck ached.

☐ The most common used word in conversation is "I."

☐ When you save for a long time to buy something and can't buy it, that's inflation.

☐ When better predictions are made, weather forecasters won't make them.

☐ The Arctic tern spends 3 months of each year in the Arctic region, 3 months in the Antarctic. Where does he spend the other 6 months? The answer: In the air, flying from one to the other. Mention of terns reminds me of a quip by Ogden Nash: "Leave no tern unstoned."

☐ SIC! SIC! SIC!

That's the way VERBATIM captions linguistic boo-boos that are sent in by readers. Enjoy a few:

"A free lamp to the first 10 customers who purchase a King Size bed every day."

"Child grows into sweater."

"Mr. Simpson dies, as stated, 3 days later, and on Tuesday of the following week."

"Russian Satirists Exploit Chink in Chinese Armor."

"Police show improvement; man dies from wound."

Town ponders legality of construction ban

Health Board's request form.

Attorney Slater said a building construction moratorium is not rare, and other Massachusetts' communities have imposed such bans when confronted with similar situations. In Framingham, for instance, the town imposed a temporary ban on apartment construction until a formal zoning bylaw prohibiting the action could be devised and approved by the town. This would be similar to the situation in Cohasset, he explained.

Water Commissioner Peter Pratt reiterated what he told town meeting voters in June, saying the town should have initiated a watershed district several years ago. If such a bylaw had been enacted at that time, "one of the largest commercial landfills in the state would never have been allowed in this area," he said.

One of the engineering firms competing for the watershed project, S.E.A.,is conducting a scope of service for the commission regarding an investigation of suspected pollutions eminating from Cohasset Heights-Landfill.

Currently, S.E.A., and Camp, Dresser and McKee are proposing project bids for review by the Water Commission. A firm, which will complete the formal watershed perameters accompanied by a full legal document, will be selected soon.

Although the Water Commission has long advocated the creation of a watershed district, it is the Board of Health which has the power to legally enforce a future bylaw.

planning board rejected the parking designs.

Atty. Sullivan said his clients have requested a hearing before the Conservation Commission. They hope to begin construction of the sales store and parking area by the first of 1985.

The two brothers plan to move to the area, Atty. Sullivan said, adding that this will be the only auto dealership owned by the Abbi-Ezzis'.

The design of the building has not yet been selected, although the Ford Company has several renderings from which to choose, Atty. Sullivan explained. "Whatever the design, the two men will be willing to do whatever is required of them by the town," he added.

This proposed project will be the fourth car dealership along the commercial strip of Route 3A from the Scituate line through Cohasset.

Although originally proposed for a location further south toward the Scituate-Cohasset line, Atty. Sullivan said the negotiations were never completed. The configuration of the previous proposal posed an additional difficulty. The Cohasset side of the facility was zoned commercial and the Scituate portion was zoned for residential or conservation use.

The attorney estimated it would a month before the first hearing is scheduled before the Cohasset Conservation Comission.

Behind the Olympic scene

onto the finals in Los Angeles for a shot at a medal.

This elongated process of elimination was preceded by previous European elimination tournaments. In fact, as good as the Norwegian team played, Arne explained that the only reason they were allowed to participate in the United States was because of the boycott from the Communist bloc countries.

When, in their third match, it was required that Norway win, they did just that, he said. But it was imperative that France and Chile, who were playing in a Maryland stadium, not tie. But they eventually did, and Norway's chances for a medal vanished as quickly as the score was posted.

"The players took it well. They would have like to see much more of the country. This was a limited aspect that they saw in Cambridge. They didn't even get to see much of Boston. It was a five-minute drive a couple of times a day to and from the Quincy House at Harvard to the stadium."

The Oslo native said a few of the players were residents of his birthplace. But because the capital city is so large, they would not be familiar with any of the friends or places remembered from Arne's past.

Now the owner of a ship's chandlery in Boston, Arne is settled into the customs of suburban living in the United States, and will never stray from its shores. The nine days he spent as part of the 23rd Olympiad is now a memory.

Arne will be unable to forget those few days. As a token of gratitude for his volunteer efforts, he was given an official outfit, provided by Levi's. In bold green and yellow, the outfit proclaims to all that Arne was indeed a part of the summer proceedings. A cap, jersey, jacket, slacks and sneakers signifies the important role he provided in the increasingly technical background of the international Olympics.

Let's get ready for a new school year!

A peak at cable

Cable television and all it encompasses is coming to the Cohasset schools. And no one is more excited about its future than John Packard, who is supervising this welcomed invasion of cable television into the Cohasset school system.

This year, Cohasset students will become acquainted with the wonder and seemingly magical world of cable television. And Packard maintains this will be just the beginning. The future utilization of cable within the schools is virtually endless.

This year, students at the high school will become familiar with the new cable studio. What once housed rooms 106 and 107 is in the midst of conversion now, soon to be a cable production studio, editing, storage. office and radio rooms.

Packard is convinced that students and faculty will be daily visitors to the new studio. "It's going to be busy here 24 hours a day, once this thing gets going," he confidently predicts.

What was once used as an English and Social Studies classroom and later as a general meeting room, is now the fully carpeted cable studio. The large rectangular room will be the production area for many future programs to be produced and directed by the students and faculty of the Cohasset schools.

The second area was previously Room 106 where daily lessons in Social Studies and General Business were provided to the high school students.

As a provision of the contract between the town and American Cablesystems, the school system was provided with two color cameras, two portable recorders, two editing decks with monitors, tripods amd dollies for the cameras, cables, cassette recorders, a set of portable

Talking with Nedrow

By Jane Lane

He is a "newcomer" to town. Yet school committee chairman Joseph Nedrow feels that is an asset.

He can never say his is a wisdom acquired from a Cohasset birthplace. Yet he has lived here long enough to realize it is a good town, filled with decent people like himself who want to be involved in sustaining that quality.

"I have never seen a town such as this one, where so many people, so many professionals who are experts in their fields, offer their services to town boards and committees," he commented this week. "I think this is a great town with a great level of participation by its residents."

He cited the school committee as a notable example of how diversified, yet commonly-united these groups can be. "When I think of this present school committee, I think of five very different people with different philosophies. We may have our differences and our arguments. But they're good arguments, all for the sake of the town," he added.

Nedrow was voted chairman of the committee this year, the final term of a three-year elected position. That term expires in April, and the Fairoaks Lane resident is unsure whether he will seek re-election. Not attempting to dodge a pointed question, Nedrow very seldom evades an answer. He simply said business considerations and family obligations will be prime elements when he considers re-election.

He is proud that he has become involved in the town and its school system, although he and his family moved here just six years ago. But as Nedrow explained,

Budget review

Just when taxpayers have put the school budget to bed, the supplies and textbooks have been purchased, and teachers prepare for another year of academics, Asst. Superintendent Stephen Hart is busy computing next year's expenses.

Within his office at the high school, Hart is double-checking daily computer printouts. These multi-layered sheets allow Hart to analyze daily expenditures, to ensure that everything remains within budgetary allotments.

And the word for the 1984-1985 school year is "the budget looks okay, as long as we don't have too many unexpected expenses." It is that dread of the unknown that sends shivers down the backbone of budget-watchers such as Hart.

With the addition of a fifth grade teacher, an unexpected appropriation requested by many Osgood School parents, the budget has to be re-arranged elsewhere. For instance, Hart explained, a new Science teacher is scheduled to be hired, replacing a longtime teacher and department chairman who was paid at a higher salary. The savings in this area will offset the costs of hiring the additional instructor.

But another unknown factor in this financial puzzle is one that is confronted each year. How many staff people will be out sick and for how long? The cost of substitutes or replacements is always an impossible-to-predict figure the school system has to contend with annually.

There may be many changes to a budget totaling $4,065,335.

The roof repairs being completed, the talk of the town throughout the past budget sessions, will have no

Sewer commission rejects need for report

By Jane Lane

The state Environmental Protection Agency (MEPA) has until September 7 to determine whether Cohasset must conduct an environmental impact report of the proposed sewage disposal plan.

At a meeting scheduled yesterday morning, Cohasset sewer commissioners were prepared to summarize their opposition to what they described as a "superfluous" report. Saying an order to issue yet another lengthy engineering report would be "superfluous, unnecessary and a gross waste of Cohasset money," commission chairman Charles DeSantis had planned to emphasize "Cohasset's deep concern that the state is developing the need for another report just to slow us down."

The chairman added, "we're ready to roll with the Ward Engineering plan. We've got the momentum and we don't want to lose it by an unnecessary study."

If MEPA determines that an environmental impact study of the Ward plan is necessary, it would result in a request for additional appropriations from town meeting, and a several-month delay in the actual construction of a disposal system while the study is completed by the Springfield engineering firm.

"We are aware of our commitment legally," DeSantis said. "We want to get this discharge permit cleaned up. We don't want to sin any more. By the end of this meeting (yesterday) we will have demonstrated well all concerns of the Department of Water Pollution Control (DWPC) have been well documented and this study is unnecessary."

The sewer commissioners have been busy men, having met last Friday with state officials at the office of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE). Also attending that session were state and local officials representing the town of Kingston. According to DeSantis, DWPC has refused grant monies for the alternative sewage systems proposed by both towns.

Kingston is a South Shore community with a population similar to Cohasset. According to DeSantis, it was a mandate under the federal Clean Waters Act, that such small municipalities devise less expensive alternative disposal plans, rather than constructing costly treatment plants. At that meeting last week, Kingston official Ed Valley stated that without DWPC grant funding, that town could not afford to proceed with the project.

In his address to several DEQE and DWPC officials, DeSantis said it was unfair of the DWPC to separate the Cohasset project into two phases, and disallow

Three injured in accident

David Blatchford, 23, of 22 Linden St., Rockland, was charged with driving under the inlfuence of alcohol, failure to keep right of the road, and driving to endanger, following an accident Monday in which three persons were injured.

The accident occurred Monday on South Main Street. Blatchford was treated for cuts at the South Shore Hospital, and later released.

The driver of the second car involved in the accident, Alex Baris of Clapp Road in Scituate, was listed in good condition at South Shore Hospital. And the driver of the third car involved, Bridgit Truex of Hawley Road in Scituate, was treated and released from the hospital.

Vandalism 'Out of control'

Daniel Lahey, manager of Kimball's by the Sea, told selectmen last week that vandalism at the motor lodge is "in an out-of-control condition."

While he felt increased police visibility in the area over the past two weeks had helped alleviate the situation somewhat, the problem is still serious.

"I truly feel like I'm babysitting someone else's kids," Lahey said, adding that police are experiencing the same frustration he is trying to bring the problem under control. The vandals come out after 1 a.m., he said, and hang around in the memorial park adjacent to Kimball's, sometimes until 4 or 5 a.m.

"They're like a stinging bee--they come in and make their kill and they're gone," Lahey explained. He said the kids come onto his property and destroy property, then flee to the park, which is public property.

"The problem will resolve itself when the kids go back to school," Lahey said, "but I think we're kidding ourselves if we don't think they'll be back (on weekends and during school and summer vacations). And the problem gets worse each year."

Selectmen advised to post Kimball's with 'No trespassing' signs, and said they would look into posting closing hours at the park.

Selectman Frank England said "I think we're back to the same problem--we don't have enough policemen. Our summer police help was cut out this year."

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur voiced another view of the problem. "More police help isn't the only solution. The kids have to have something to do, somewhere to go, and parents have to take more responsibility--they have to know what their kids are doing, when they're doing it, and why they're doing it."

Say hello to sister Souppes

Cohasset has a sister city, and her name is Souppes Sur Loing, France.

Acting on a request from Thomas G. Churchill of Boundbrook Lane, selectmen approved the adoption of the town's only sibling.

Churchill told the board he was an officer in the regiment which secured the town against the Nazis during World War II. On his return there earlier this year, Churchill said "the town officials were very interested in being a sister identity to Cohasset . . . I think they're longing for an identity in the world."

Churchill said Souppes (pronounced "soup") is a small town of around 6,500 residents, located 45 miles south of Paris. It has its own community center and sailing club, and in many other ways is similar to Cohasset.

Selectmen unanimously approved the adoption, and sent a telex message to Souppes officials the next day.

Bon jour!!

Watershed group formed

Selectmen have approved the formation of a Watershed Protection Area Committee to develop a plan (and possibly zoning bylaw changes) for protecting watershed areas.

The board will be made of nine members, including one member each from the board of health, water department, planning board, drainage board, board of selectmen, conservation commission, and three citizens.

The committee will remain active until it has finished developing a plan and proposed articles for town meeting consideration.

Hazardous Waste day

On the recommendation of the board of health, Selectmen have approved the town hall parking lot as the site for the town's first hazardous waste clean-up day.

Designed for the collection of household chemical materials (such as old paint, fertilizers and pesticides) only, the clean-up is scheduled for Saturday, Sept. 22 (hours have not been designated yet).

Selectmen questioned whether the event should be held in the town hall parking lot or at the town landfill. Health officials said it would be easier to clean up a chemical spill from asphalt than dirt, and said the only asphalt surface at the landfill is at the recycling center--which they said is too busy on Saturdays to conduct the program.

Selectmen approved the town hall location, and asked a hazardous waste committee member to come back to the board with more details on the day, and whether the fire department should be on hand in case of a spill.

The representative told the board a hazardous waste clean-up day will only be necessary once a year, or even once every two years. Should the town join SEMASS, she said, there will be no need for the program.

Lanza released

Selectmen have accepted the resignation of executive secretary Mark Lanza and released him from his contract with the town. The resignation is effective Sept. 6.

Lanza, who has been executive secretary for over a year and a half, has accepted the executive secretary position offered to him by the town of Westwood.

After accepting the resignation, selectman John DeBassio asked "Shall I instruct Mark to write a letter to himself to express our regrets and thanks?"

Selectmen are now advertizing for Lanza's replacement, and will be accepting resumes and applications through Sept. 29. The replacement will be paid up to $25,000, depending on his or her education and experience.

Lanza suggested that if a candidate is not hired until mid-October or November, the board might consider adding to the new salary the money which accumulates between the time of his resignation and the hiring.

a brave Copper King built an enchanted kingdom in a land by the sea.
There in Scituate, he surrounded his mansion with idyllic pastures and formal gardens. Then built a fairy tale tower to watch over his dream.

lights, a machine which records titles on the screen, and microphones. The total value of the production tools total about $17,500, according to Packard.

In his specifications to the cable company, the supervisor of the high school audio visual department also stressed the need for totally portable equipment, to be used by all Cohasset students and teachers.

In fact, he states, there was no specific mention of the cable studio within the cable contract. But it was last year, as "scores of teachers and students" were becoming acquainted with the production equipment, when the cry became apparent for a studio.

"We would be cramped, 15 in my little office next to the library. People would be walking around sideways trying to get by. It made us quickly realize the need for a studio," Packard added.

These are not the luxurious trappings of a commercial television production area. But the studio at Cohasset High School will be more than adequate to meet the needs of these budding directors and producers. And the work, Packard stresses, has been a minimal expense for the school system.

Under the guidance of John Jacobucci, director of maintenance and special projects for the Cohasset schools, the studio has sprung forth from simple ideas. Packard states simply the studio would have never been a reality without Jacobucci.

"I had written down some ideas about the studio and an office. Then John looked at my designs, re-did them completely, and came up with five spacious rooms where I had created two. And being a Jack-of-all-trades, he has also constructed the entire project, with the exception of the carpeting. That has been the only outside contracting expense," Packard explained.

Packard envisions all-day use of the cable equipment and production areas. Because the rooms are situated close to the high school's main offices, access to studio will be available throughout the day.

Although Cohasset cable television will be experiencing its crawling stages this year, Packard envisions a limitless future for the schools and community.

With the community television studio downtown, many students have already, or are about to complete production training there. These apprentices are then ready to start some serious cable programming for the school system during the day, Packard explained, and perhaps helping with community productions at the downtown location during the evening.

The interest of teachers and students alike has been piqued by the innovations of cable television. Their experience, abilities and imagination will dictate the success of the cable studio.

"I hope," he said. "that eventually every classroom in Cohasset will have a cable drop. I truly believe the future of cable is in data transmission. This is the real future of cable television, especially in the schools."

Through the Channel 3 bulletin board notices, school organizations and activities will have expanded publicity and will generate greater community interest. School sports, and perhaps someday, school plays, will be broadcast for a greater audience than ever before.

The imagination for cable productions does not cease, nor does the anticipation of Cohasset's Dr. Packard.

"Once cable is in, and we are able to receive and transmit from two points in the network, the capabilities are unlimited,"he predicted. "If someone is lecturing at one school, hundreds of other students in surrounding towns will be able to listen to that person, and ask questions directly to him, through the efforts of cable television. Cohasset students will be benefitting from other systems throughout Massachusetts and that will make education better for everyone."

Budget looks trim for new year

bearing on that total school appropriation. That is a separate and distinct budgetary item, expended in a totally separate manner from the operating budget. Any additional appropriations for that project, if necessary, must be approved by a future town meeting.

That 1984-1985 budget represents a 5.7 percent increase over the previous year's budget. Although Cohasset prides itself on surviving the bludgeoning of Prop. 2 1/2, there are no expenses added easily into a school budget. Each line item (of which there are thousands) is scrutinized by all school administrators, school committee members, advisory committee members, and finally by the voters. There are no surprises by the time that budget reaches the floor of town meeting.

Although Hart is not eager to compare numbers, Cohasset's annual budgetary increase is less than most surrounding communities. The average South Shore town increased it school appropriations by 7.4 percent last year over the previous budget.

Hart said Cohasset is still maintaining a fine system for its students, despite the relatively small scale increases over the years.

Although the number of students in a school system does not always have a direct correlation with the total budget, Hart said the currently-declining Cohasset student population is reflected to an extent in this new budget. And although the enrollment figure hasdecreased during the past 10 years, population projections indicate a slight increase in the number of kindergarten students entering this year and in the following years. Thus, Hart explained, the top grade levels will be on a continual decline, while the lower grades will show slight increases. The end result means a student population that will not decrease, but will level off in the next ten years.

Even with the downward population trend, Cohasset will not realize immediate, drastic budget reductions, he said. Teachers, school buildings and principals will still be needed whether you have 1200 students or 1000, Hart explained. With only three schools within the total system, Cohasset cannot even consider closing a building.

In the meantime, Hart said the schools are taking steps toward cost-savings. Cohasset last year joined the South Shore Purchasing Group, comprised of several area communities in a group effort to purchase petroleum gas at a lower group rate. The major roof repairs are also expected to save thousands of dollars in energy consumption, he added.

But on the other side of the ledger, the costs of books, paper and supplies rise continually, much to Hart's amazement. "We send for a shipment of paper products, and we get back a bill much higher than we anticipated. So, somehow, we have to cut down on our demand for the supplies," he said.

Per pupil costs in Cohasset have averaged $2468 this past year. The state average is $2288. Although he dislikes comparisons, Hart noted the slight edge Cohasset maintains over the state level is not that great. "I think it speaks quite well for the type of school we have here. This is a pretty competitive system, with demands from many of the parents and students who expect graduates from a highly-regarded system; students who will continue to college," he added.

As with any household budget, Hart explained, "we're always lucky to break even. We'll be doing very well if our expenses do not exceed our appropriations."

"after your kids have been in school anywhere for more than two days, parents become very involved."

Being an executive of the General Motors Corp., he and his family, including wife Ruth and their three children, have been transferred throughout the country. It has always been an objective of the Nedrow family to become involved in their particular community, with sports, schools and politics. In other communities far from Cohasset's shores, Nedrow has served on school committees and town advisory boards.

"That's the point," he explained. "When you have been transferred as many times as we have, you realize that if you're going to become involved in a community, you can't wait six or seven years. You have to do it immediately."

Nedrow, who holds two Master's degrees, and a Doctorate, said coming to Cohasset from Michigan was an easy choice for him and his wife. After searching up and down the coast from Duxbury to Marblehead for a suitable home, a realtor quickly advised them that Cohasset would be the best location for their family. They were in Michigan when the realtor called to say she knew one house that would be coming on the market. They flew into Boston on the 10 a.m. flight, met the realtor, looked at the house, signed a purchase agreement and were back in Michigan early that afternoon.

Not all his accomplishments have been gained so quickly, Nedrow admitted, but he is satisfied with the current direction the school committee and the guidance it has provided the school system during the past years.

"You have to remember that all five members of the school committee inherited a fine system with a great reputation. It's our responsibility as the school committee now, to be custodians of that system. And I hope we will continue to do that," he said.

The greatest achievement the school committee could attain this year, "is to ensure that every kid, regardless of his or her ability, has the opportunity to reach his individual potential," he said. Every committee,

Nedrow wants community support of schools

past and present, Nedrow added, hopes that the school system in Cohasset will remain conducive to learning for every child.

"We have a superintendent with 35 years as a school professional and we have lay people who are willing to give us input and ideas. We rely heavily on the recommendations of all our educators. I can say that this school committee feels our teachers are the best, and they are an asset to the Cohasset public schools," Nedrow added.

Perhaps the only alteration he would like to make in the present direction of the school system, is to educate residents on the separation of academics and the school facilities, as they relate to the annual budget.

When Nedrow planned to address the town meeting for additional appropriations last April, he intended to explain to his neighbors that notonly must theysupport the maintenance of the structures which house the students, but also the core of their education, the tools and resources they use in their academic endeavors.

"I was going to say at that time, something I still feel is very important, that if we looked at the school system from a business standpoint we'd say the graduates are the product of the system. And these graduates are going to be in competition for employment, or in college. The raw material is the kindergarten student entering the system and the process takes 12 years," he continued. "The specific tools and teachers we have within this system will make the student competitive and capable of succeeding outside the system."

Student population decline is an area of concern for the school committee chairman. He advises the community that innovative and creative alternatives may have to be addressed if Cohasset is to keep a quality system with a dwindling population.

"Being a smaller school system, we are penalized. But in order to offer our students the variety of courses we do now, we may have to become very creative, perhaps on a consortium level, to maintain our fine curriculum," he said. The school committee and the system it oversees must not be afraid of change and innovation in the future, Nedrow warned.

Overall, the chairman is pleased with the current direction of the system, saying, "we have great facilities, and teachers. And there is a good working relationship targeted toward the kids — to provide everyone with a good education. That's the best thing we have going for us."

As chairman, Nedrow realizes he "is only one-fifth of the vote. My vote only facilitates, to help focus in on the issues — to have a mechanism to get a lot of information before us. And then better decisions can be made by all five committee members. I think we have been reaching that goal in the past, and will continue this year."

☐ Stephen W Camardo, a management major, and his brother Anthony J. Camardo, both of 34 Windy Hill Road, attained Dean's List honors for the Spring 1984 semester at Syracuse University.

☐Brendan Mulcahy had his 17th birthday last week, and had a "big bash" that was enjoyed by all. Happy birthday to you.

☐ Debora A. Babin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Babin of 120 Jerusalem Road will begin an orientation program for freshmen at Babson College September 5. She will join over 400 other first-year students for the five-day program before beginning classes September 10.

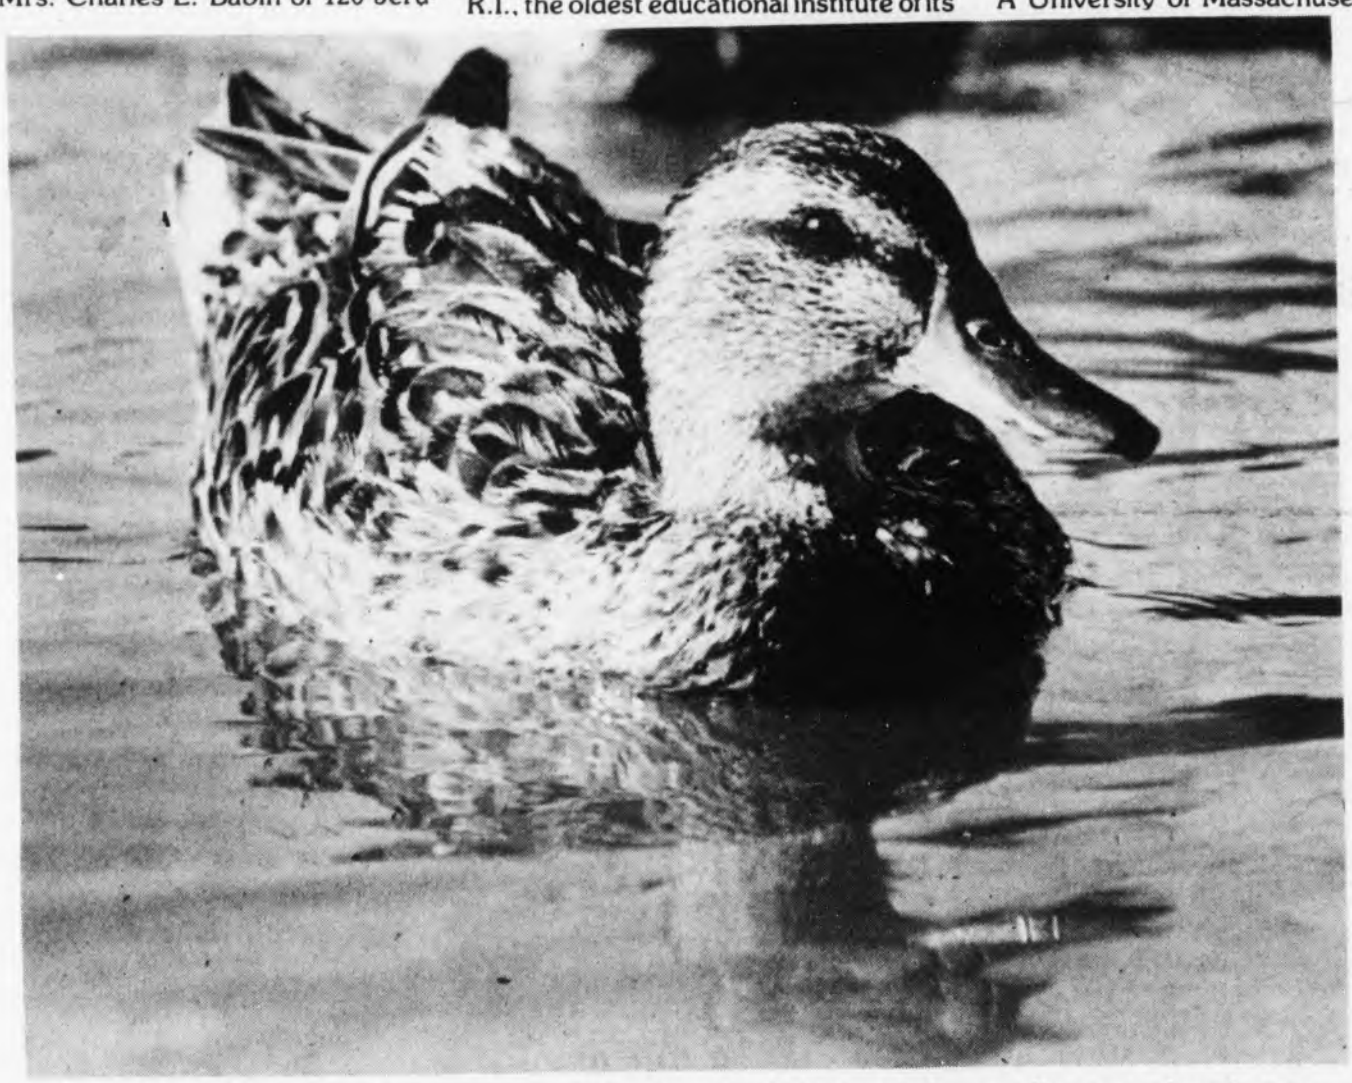
☐ Navy Lt. Cmdr. Daniel J. Brennock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brennock of 35 Oak St., Cohasset, Mass., was graduated from the Naval War College.

The Naval War College at Newport, R.I., the oldest educational institute of its type in the world, presents graduate level courses for selected (senior) military officers and top level government executives.

☐ Michelle Kjer, director of Relo Services at the Jack Conway Real Estate Company, recently received the Accredited Relocation Coordinator (ARC) designation from J.B. Goodwin, president of Relo/Inter-City Relocation Services of Chicago.

A University of Massachusetts graduate, Kjer is a Cohasset native who now lives in Scituate. She has been associated with Relo services at the Conway Company since 1980 and completed a series of educational requirements to receive the ARC designation.

☐ Rick Grassie turned out to be an excellent society reporter for me this weekend! Rick was attending an anniversary party at the home of Paul and Karen Laugelle (who were happily celebrating their fifth) when he was asked to be a member of a wedding party in a year or so! Jim Runey "popped the question" to Carol Dietrick, who then received a beautiful diamond ring! Surely a happy occasion for all.



☐Lisa Cuff has a lot of people in tears this week! Lisa is readying for her AFS trip, she is traveling to Japan for 11 months. The experience should be great, and Lisa is excited, but the tears are from all of her friends that will miss her. Perhaps letters and postcards will make up or at least help. So keep them coming, Lisa (be sure the friends keep up their end,too).

☐Alice Fraser of Norwell has joined the Cohasset office of Gallery 360, according to Tom Hamilton.

A real estate professional for nearly eight years, Fraser was a million dollar broker in 1983 and has already passed the million dollar mark in 1984. She has played an active role in the Plymouth County Board of Realtors and is a member of the Education and Grievance Committees. She is also a past member of the Board's Bylaws Committee.

A graduate of the Teachers College of Columbia University in New York City, Fraser has a masters degree in Nursing Service Administration. Before entering the real estate business, she was a nursing service administrator for 10 years.

☐ Happy Birthday Norman.

☐ That familar face that has been spotted around town is that of Dutchie Hernan, visiting with Harry Ritter for a while. It sure is good to see him, and the weather that he brought with him is outstanding!

☐ Ron Rawson, producer of the South Shore Music Circus, surprised everyone on the lot last Sunday when Ronnie Milshap appeared. As you know, Ronnie Milshap is a country-western singer and Ron Rawson is very much the New York distinguished style dresser. All were "bowled over" when he appeared on the lot in his cowboy boots and nifty cowboy hat! Ron reports that whenever he wears the boots (even when he goes to the mid west) people want to know where he got them. He always gives the same reply . . . "Bah-ston".

☐ The "exodus" has begun in earnest, as all of the college students head off for school. Good luck to all, and a word to you . . . remember we are here and want to hear your news, so be sure to let me now about it, either through me or your folks!

☐ Everyone joins in in wishing Executive Secretary Mark Lanza the best of luck in his new job that will be in Westwood. It doesn't seem like he has been here for a year and a half, but it is true! Thanks for the good work, Mark.

Taking one final plunge into Mill River is Don Chiasson.
(Bill Quigley)

☐ So far, the fate of the Auditorium in the Town Hall has remained status quo. Last weekend showed yet another reason to keep things as they are, when the teens held a successful dance there. The stage must have been perfect for disc jockey Jay Fiori to work from!

☐ It seems like lots of veterans have "war stories" but Thomas Churchill really must take pride in his! He recently returned to Souppes sur Ling, in France, where he helped to liberate the town in 1944. Major Churchill led the Eighth Tank Battalion into the hamlet after learning the German Army was preparing to blow up key bridges there. Last week Churchill met with selectmen to ask that Souppes be adopted as a sister community, which they unanimously accepted! I'll bet that more than one teacher will decide to make it a pen pal community effort too.

☐ This is the last week of summer, now it's time to let everyone know what special things you did or are about to do. Summertime is hard to get the news to me, but now is the time to make up for that.

It's a public right

Private discussions held in a public meeting are no longer a secret.

For good or bad, better or worse, dialogue submitted during an open public meeting is for all to hear. The days of backdoor deals and secret handshakes are hopefully drawing to a close in all municipalities.

Viewpoints, opinions, disagreements, and arguments expressed during an open session are public expressions. It is the right and responsibility of the press to report it.

It's not always the easiest path to choose. Certainly no one wants to tarnish the reputation and good name of another. But when discussions regarding a person are held in a public forum, the press has a duty to report it accurately, without bias.

Objectivity is the aim of every journalist. From a suburban weekly to the L.A. Times, it is the highest goal a news writer continually strives toward.

And when anyone seeks, usually with honorable intentions, to keep a name or event from the pages of a newspaper, it is our only alternative to deny that request, if that important item was discussed during an open meeting, or is a matter of public record.

This is sometimes a painful decision, knowing the publication may bring humiliation or degradation upon some person. But a newspaper is not responsible for that discussion which took place, or that event which occurred. Journalism, in its simplest form, relays public information to the people who seek that knowledge.

We are neither judge, nor jury. We cast no judgements other than to predetermine that none are innocent, none are guilty.

But we will continue to publish the facts of an event or discussion; the basic inherent element of a free, unbiased press.

As an added note, the days of local cable programming are approaching quickly. We doubt any town official or Cohasset resident will dare jump in front of a camera recording a public meeting and shout, "Stop the cameras! You can't film this. This is not for public viewing!"

A final note, next week the Mariner will publish a regional look at what Cohasset and regional towns will be doing for school cable television. Next to computers, cable T.V. as a technology, will have the most significant impact on public education in the next five years.

NEWS ITEM - Cohasset: Mystery of why The Common duck pond turned blue is solved. Disturbed by murky brown of the water — 'the color was just disgraceful,' park and tree superintendent creatively added a harmless bright blue organic dye to the water. The dramatic change prompted Tyde-bol comparisons. Others thought they were in the Bahamas

"...The blue is just perfect with my yellow Lily Dache...on the other hand, it'll never square with the historical commission's color code..."

League debate

The Cohasset League of Women Voters is joining the Hingham, Marshfield, Duxbury and Scituate Leagues in sponsoring a Pre-Primary Candidates Night, Friday, September 7, 7:30 p.m. sharp at the Scituate Town Library.

Six candidates for the U.S. House of Representatives will participate in the debate. The debate will be rebroadcast on the Cohasset Cable television September 9 and 10 at 7:30 p.m.

It's Fritz & Ronnie in 'Family Feud'

By Claire McDonough

"How did you like the spectacle in Dallas last week?" the Dragon asked.

"I'm glad it's over," I replied. "I couldn't have taken the suspense much longer. Thank heaven now we know who their nominees are."

I looked at him curiously. "How did you rate it?"

He shook his head sadly. "Disappointing. I kept reading and seeing TV promos for the big week-long Dallas spectacular. I couldn't wait. I got in a supply of snacks and cold drinks, and I took early evening naps so I could stay up late for the entire show. I didn't miss a single episode, and you know what? There wasn't one sign of J.R. Or any other Ewing, for that matter."

I patted his hand. "I can see where you'd feel let down," I said. "But how about that show in California earlier this month. Was that any better?"

The Dragon frowned. "It was worse. Not only did they not show a single shot of a vineyard, they held out false hope. They had a candidate whose husband was accused of wheeling and dealing. I was sure it was a lead in to a new nighttime drama about the super rich."

"When did you realize it wasn't?"

"When they revealed that the guy pays 40 percent of his income in taxes. No one on "Falconcrest" or "Dynasty" would get caught dead doing that. And certainly no one on "Dallas" would."

I nodded sympathetically. "I don't think they even have any one on "General Hospital" who doesn't play the loopholes."

"You know," he continued, "I thought it would be exciting to have a woman vice presidential candidate, but I was wrong about that, too."

"If you're going to say anything about a big political bust," I warned him, "don't expect a very peaceful weekend around here."

The Dragon looked hurt. "As if I would.

"No, I just don't think either party has fully exploited the dramatic potential. They've both been presenting 'continuing dramas' that leave you feeling let down. What they ought to do is go for the game show format."

"Did you say 'game show' " I asked politely.

He nodded. "Game show. I figure we should get Richard Dawson to host it. He gives them the topics, like "Federal Deficit," "Nuclear Disarmament," "Unemployment," "Separation of Church and State," and "Women's Rights."

"It's Ronald and George against Fritz and Geraldine. The team that gets the most appropriate phrases on the board in a given time wins."

He frowned. "I haven't decided yet whether to let Nancy prompt Ronald. If I do, then I probably should let Jesse coach Fritz from the sidelines."

"Your idea has possibilities," I admitted. "But who gets to decide which answers are appropriate? I mean, remarks like 'Bomb Russia in 5 minutes,' or 'Any jackass can tear down a barn,' might get mixed reviews.

"Have you considered a panel of judges including, say, Rev. Falwell and Rev. Jackson, Phyllis Schlafly and Gloria Steinem, Capser Weinberg and Helen Caldicott, Jesse Helm and Tip O'Neill? The only problem is that you'd need a truly impartial, farsighted individual to break any ties."

The Dragon nodded modestly. "The way I see it, it's either me or J.R. Ewing."

Letters

Praise the work of Cohassett's EMT's

(This letter was sent to Executive Secretary Mark Lanza. Ed.)

Dear Mr. Lanza:

Our Fire Department has been the subject of a great deal of controversy. The Chief versus Firefighters differences have been bantered about at the local coffee shop, at Town and Selectmen's meetings and in the media. However, all of the semantics and exchanges about our department do not properly describe the quality of services that we residents of Cohasset are privileged to have.

This letter is not an attempt to champion either side of the aforementioned disputes but merely to recognize and publicly commend the quality of service and dedication of our Firefighters for a job well done.

In the past four months, I have had two occasions to call the Fire Department to transport my 86 year old father to the South Shore Hospital. Their response was prompt; their work efficient and skillfully executed. As taxpayers, I'm sure everyone would agree that this is our expectation. However . . . above and beyond this, these firefighters and E.M.T.'s demonstrated qualities which could never be taught. It is difficult to find words which can adequately describe the genuine compassion manifested by these men.

Who stands taller than the man who stoops to wrap an arm around a hysterical child to whisper words of encouragement? How can you convey the gratitude and relief that is felt by the teenaged grandchild who was left at home to "hold the fort" and comfort the children, when the ambulance stops by the house on it's return run from the hospital, to assure everyone that their grandfather is going to be all right?

Cohasset is indeed fortunate to have a Fire Department staffed by warm, compassionate, caring, dedicated human beings who are committed to the well-being of their fellow citizens.

God bless them all.

With sincere thanks from Congressional race: Flynn, Crampton take aim

"If we do run again, it will be the first campaign I ever enjoyed."

Congressman Gerry Studds
August 18, 1983 at an interview with the Mariner

By David Cutler

Commentary

It is about a year now, and if Congressman Gerry Studds is enjoying the campaign of 1984, it doesn't show.

This is not a season of political pleasantries. Nor is it a re-run of elections past when Studds would march to the podium — his rapier wit in hand — and demolish an opponent en route to another electoral victory.

Since his tough fight with Republican William Weeks of Cohasset in 1972, Gerry Studds has spent relatively little money and relatively little time in extending his congressional career. He has beaten everyone everywhere, losing only the town of Harwich in 1980 and that was to former Harwich Moderator Paul Doane. If anyone ever owned a mantle of invincibility, it was Gerry Studds of the 10th Congressional District.

Invincible is not the word to describe the poltiical fortunes of Gerry Studds this year. Not yet anyway. The polls have him ahead but the undecided vote, ranging from 20 to 63 per cent, is uncomfortably large for a veteran congressman. It is the undecideds who bring comfort to the opposition — most notably Democrat Peter Flynn and Republican Lewis Crampton — who say it shows people are looking for someone else to vote for.

The 10th is the most conservative congressional district in Massachusetts. Voters were kind to Richard Nixon here and in 1980, Ronald Reagan, with help from John Anderson, carried the district. The Republican Party, so moribund elsewhere in Massachusetts, continues to show strength on the Cape and along the South Shore where three of the four state representatives from Hingham to Plymouth are Republican.

All this has been of little consequence to Studds in past years, despite his being so at home in the liberal wing of the Democratic Party. He is a liberal who has made mincemeat out of conservatives.

ENTER THE CENSURE

It is last year's censure — the result of Studds' 1973 homosexual liaison with a congressional page — that changed the script. It is the censure that prompted the Republican National Committee to target the 10th and it is the censure that brought national exposure to a congressional race that usually receives scant notice from the Boston press. CBS News has already done a piece and reporters have trudged north from the Wall Street Journal, the Washington Post and the Philadelphia Inquirer. More will come as the race heats up.

This is also the most crowded congressional race in recent memory. On the Democratic side, Studds has challenges from Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Flynn and from Christopher Trundy, a New Bedford businessman. The Republican Primary fight pits Lewis Crampton of Plymouth against George Donovan of Hull and John Bennett of Provincetown.

Political sharpies say that Studds will emerge a bloody but victorious winner in the Democratic Primary, ready for a showdown with Crampton in the finale. That thinking is sound.

Trundy, with a miniscule showing in the polls, is not a factor in this race and Flynn, despite an aggressive, sometimes bombastic campaign (he has called Studds a liar and a child molester), has yet to make a major dent in the polls. He is, however, buoyed by the undecided vote and in the remaining three weeks plans to launch a major advertising campaign.

A former campaign director for Gov. Edward King, Flynn is a conservative Democrat who shares little enthusiasm for the liberal policies of Studds. Crampton, a self described moderate-to-conservative Republican is probably closer to Studds on the political spectrum.

Flynn has publicly expressed frustration over his inability to get Studds into a slugging match. There are debates in the offing but for the most part, Studds has ignored the Flynn attacks and will probably continue to do so. When pressed, it is clear he has little regard for the Flynn campaign, comparing it to the effort of Edward Dinis in 1976 who Studds says ran a nasty race on abortion and gay rights. "Those were his two issues."

REPUBLICANS

The Republican race has become a two-man affair between Crampton and Donovan, with the campaign of John Bennett remaining a mystery.

Donovan is a conservative Republican who makes no secret of his admiration for President Reagan. He has taken several whacks at Crampton for the latter's less than total allegiance to the President. Crampton rejects the criticism, responding he is solidly with Reagan on the issues of fiscal responsiblity, a strong defense and cutting spending. "It is on the cultural issues — pro ERA, strong on the environment — where my moderation comes out," he said.

Republicans generally avoid the brawls that plague Democrats, and the Crampton-Donovan contest has been a relatively tame affair in keeping with the GOP's 11th Commandment: thou shall not attack the opposition. Crampton, sensing a primary victory, is in compliance and recently his candidacy received a major boost from the National Republican Congressional Committee which issued an endorsement by naming him as the party's designated candidate. Such an endorsement is an unusual step at the primary level, and for Crampton it means an infusion of campaign money and support in fundraising.

Studds is the fundraising leader to date, having raised $133,844 in the first six months of 1984, which is more than he spent two years ago in defeating Jack Conway of Cohasset. Crampton had raised $110,000 as of late July. Both he and Studds are accepting political action committee (PAC) money, both saying, "I'm not in favor of unilateral disarmament." Flynn has rejected PAC money.

The probable Crampton-Studds showdown will not be a nasty race, but it won't be a cakewalk either. The two men, though not now close friends, know each other well. Crampton grew up in Duxbury and lived in Cohasset on Jerusalem Road not far from the Studds' home on Black Horse Lane. At one time, Crampton dated Studds' sister. "He was almost a part of the household," recalled Studds.

Crampton is willing to discuss the differences between himself and Studds but he seems even more willing to review their similarities — be they a proclivity for constituent service, opposition to oil drilling on Georges Bank or action to combat acid rain. Studds is far less enthusiastic on the subject of similarities, saying anyone who worked for the Reagan Environmental Protection Agency, as Crampton did, can't be pro-environment. Crampton, on the other hand, will do everything possible to promote Studds as a perpetual "tax and spend" man.

It will be an interesting race and a well watched race. And with the primary over and a win under his belt, Studds may yet run the first campaign "I ever enjoyed."

Explore art techniques at Art Center

An expanded young artists' department at the South Shore Art Center brings to the students new opportunities to explore different art forms and techniques.

The fall semester beginning Sept. 24 at the Center, 103 Ripley Road, Cohasset, offers young artists the chance to experiment with films as a stimuli for creating art; to explore Chinese paper sculpture, Japanese printmaking, Mexican weaving and African maskmaking; or to sample techniques of yarn stitchery, wax-resist, oaktag maskers, baker's clay sculpture and swinging mobiles. Advanced registration is required for all South Shore Art Center courses.

Lights, Camera, Action!, instructor Gil Coyle will introduce students ages seven to eleven to the idea of using films as a stimuli to creating an art activity. Coyle explained that her idea is to use the films as a tool, a lead-in to a particular activity.

"Have you ever created a magical dragon made of paper and paste?" questions Serena Brundige of students who will participate in her new course "Multimedia Workshop" beginning Tuesday, Sept. 25 from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

The course designed for ages nine to twelve will involve the students in the art of creating a Chinese paper sculpture, the technique of Japanese printmaking, the building of a loom for Mexican weaving and the adventure of African maskmaking.

Two sections of painting and drawing are scheduled. Painting and Drawing I for ages six to eight, also taught by Brundige, will begin Tuesday, Nov. 6 from 4 to 5:30 p.m. and Painting and Drawing II, for ages nine to twelve, will begin Wednesday, Nov. 7, from 3:30 to 5 p.m. and will be taught by Lisbeth Koopman-Wyman.

A new six week Moms-and-Tots course invites parent and child to experiment with creative art projects that can be reproduced at home. Brundige will introduce mothers to batik dip designs, the magical primaries, plastecene and more. Mothers and their
